The suit was instituted by six persons, namely, (1) Shiba Mal, son of Ajudhia Parshad, (2) Kidar Nath, son of Ram Parshad, (these two plaintiffs are members of the family. (3) Naubat Rai, son of Harnam Das, (4) Rahtu Mal Gupta, son of Ram Saran Das, (5) Gopi Nath, son of Richha Mal, and (6) Mangat Ram, lambardar, son of Data Ram. These are outsiders and are said to be Arya Samajists, The defendants against whom the suit is brought are the children or grand-children of the members of the family who were parties to the partition-deed. It is alleged in the plaint that Sant Lal, Gowardhan Das and Bishan Das were appointed as trustees of the wakf property. The suit was instituted so far back as the 14th of January 1914, after obtaining the necessary sanction under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The material issue which arose for decision on the pleadings of the parties was whether the ancestors of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 had endowed the property in suit for a public charitable purpose and thus had created a public trust by means of the partition-deed of 1875. Mr. Ali Hussain, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, after considering the evidence and circumstances of the case, came to the conclusion that the trust was not for a public and charitable purpose, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to maintain the suit, and dismissed it by his judgment dated the 17th of October 1914.

An appeal was preferred against his decision which was accepted and an order was made by Mr. Bishambar Dayal on the 19th of July 1915 remanding the case under O. XLI, r. 23 of the Code of Civil Procedure for trial de novo. This order of remand was set aside by a Division Bench of this Court on the 17th of May 1921, and the case was sent back to the Appellate Court for disposal. The learned Judge of the Court below has upheld the decree passed by Mr. Ali Hussain.

Ostensibly the only ground upon which the learned Judge has upheld the decree of the Trial Court is that as no trustees were appointed under the deed there was no trust at all. The following passage in the judgment speaks for itself:—

"He also urged that there was no trust at all, with this I agree. The essential idea of a trust is that certain persons hold property to or for the use of others (including charitable and religious purposes); and the creation of a trust involves the appointment of trustees. The deed in question appoints no trustees and creates no trust. It incidentally declares the charitable intentions of the owners of joint property who were dividing it among themselves. If they had not carried out these intentions nobody—no outsider at any rate—could have compelled them to do so, and the fact that their intentions were carried out for some years wholly or in part is irrelevant."

Evidently the learned Judge has imported the notions of the English Law into his judgment. The rule of the Hindu Law is thus stated by Mr. Gour in section 225 of his Hindu Code:—

"225. (1) The founder is entitled to provide for the management of any endowment created by him.

"(2) He may nominate a shebait and provide for his successor and effect will be given to his wishes if not inconsistent with the general law.

"(3) Where the founder makes an endowment without providing for its management, the right of management vests in the founder and his heirs.

"(4) The right of the founder to provide for the management devolves upon his heirs on his death.

"(5) The Court may appoint a manager in the last resort."

A trust, according to the Hindu Law, cannot fail for want of the appointment of trustees and the Court will appoint a manager on the failure of those entitled to appoint him, see page 923, paragraph 2111 of the same Code.

In the case of Viiya Varuthi Thirtha Swamigal v. Balusami Ayyar (1) at page 839* their Lordships observed: "It would in their Lordships' opinion, be a serious inroad into their rights if the rules of the Hindu and Muhammadan Laws were to be construed with the light of legal conception borrowed from abroad, unless perhaps where they are absolutely, so to speak, in pari materia." The learned Judge of the Court below was, therefore, wrong in holding that there was no endowment in this case because no trustees had been appointed. The question whether an endowment for a public and charitable purpose was made depends upon the true construction of the clause in the deed referred to in the beginning of this judgment. The shiwala is situated outside the family house and is open to the public who resort to it for worship. Thus there can be no doubt that the intention of the dedicators was to endow it to the public. The trust is created for three purposes, namely:—

(a) for a sada barat;

(b) for the construction of a shiwala, and

(c) for the expenses in connection with the sati of the family.

Out of these the last purpose only may be stated to be of a private character. In the case of Jugalkishore v. Lakshmandas Raghunathdas (2) the facts were as follows:—

"A Hindu built a temple in honour of the deity Shiri Pandurang, to which were attached a dharmsala and a sadawart for feeding travellers and giving alms to the poor. In the maintenance of the temple and the charities connected with it, he dedicated certain property by a deed of gift, under which he constituted himself a trustee for life and appointed a panch to act as his successors in the trust. During his lifetime he managed the temple as provided in the deed. On his death in 1867 the panch did not take charge, but his son (the defendant) assumed the management. The temple was open to the Hindu community."

And the learned Judges held that, "Having regard to the fact that a certain number of the public had always used the temple, that there was attached to it a dharmsala, and that the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadawart, the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public, religious and charitable purposes." In the deed in the present case it is provided that a sadawart (perpetual giving of alms) will continue to exist (sadawart jari rahega). The intention to create a perpetual charity is clear from this expression. In the detail of the property endowed it is stated that one house with shops under it and Rs. 10,000 out of the whole heritage of the deceased have been set apart for charitable purposes as wakf property, (ek makan shiwala mai dukanata zerin aur mubligh das hazar rupae wakf dharmada).

Now the expression "wakf" is a well-known technical expression conveying the idea of tying up the property in perpetuity and the word dharm ada, denotes charity. Thus there can be no doubt as to the intention of the creators of the endowment that they intended that the Rs. 10,000 were to be so employed as to feed the poor in connection with the shiwala for ever. Therefore, there is an irresistible conclusion that the Rs. 10,000 were not to be consumed but their income or interest only was to be spent in maintaining the wakf. It is not contended for the respondents that the maintenance of a temple and of a sadawart are not charities of a public nature. All that is contended for is that the intention of the creators of the trust was not to create a trust of a public and religious character. This contention cannot be sustained on the true construction of the deed.

I must, therefore, accept this appeal and set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court. As the decision of the learned Judge of the Court below upon a preliminary point is set aside, the case must be remanded for trial on the merits under O. XLI, r. 23, Civil Procedure Code. Costs will abide the result.

RADHAKISAN CHANDRABHAN AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

*Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Wagering contract—Test—*Pacca Adatia and constituent—Principal and agent.

If parties to a contract of sale and purchase of goods do not intend to make an actual transfer of goods but merely to pay and receive money according as the market price varies one way or another from the contract price of given dates, the transaction is a wagering contract. [p. 907, col. 2.]

Relationship between Pacca Adatias and their constituents is not one of principal and agent but of principal and principal and damages sustained by the former as a result of wagering contracts are not recoverable from the latter. [p. 908, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Second Additional District Judge Amraoti, dated 21s November 1921, in Civil Suit No. 8 of 1921.

Messrs. V. R. Pandit, R. P., and M. B. Marathe, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, Messrs. V. Bose and P. N. Rudra, for the Respondents.

HARNARYAN JODHRAJ v. RADHAKISAN CHANDRABHAN.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant, Harnarayan Jodhraj, a Marwari resident of Nagpur, employed the firm of Mojiram Sunderlal at Amraoti owned by Radha Kisan and Gopi Kisan sons of Chandrabhan Marwari as his pacca adatias for the sale transactions tabulated below—

Serial No.	Goods.	Quantity.	Rate.	Date of sale.	Date of delivery.	Rate on date of delivery.
			Rs. a. p.
1	Cotton seed.	100 Kh.	18 14 0	22-10-17	25-1-18	Rs. 33.
2	"	"	18 14 0	22-10-17	25-1-18	"
3	"	"	19 0 0	22-10-17	25-1-18	"
4	"	"	22 0 0	6-11-17	25-1-18	"
5	"	"	22 0 0	6-11-17	25-1-18	"
7	"	"	23 11 0	10-11-17	25-1-18	"

The plaintiffs state that the loss on account of the above transactions was Rs. 8,623-6-0. They also state that there was a loss of Rs. 541-10-6 on account of certain transactions in respect of ginned cotton entered into on the 25th October 1917. After giving credit for profits on other cotton transactions they claim a balance of Rs. 6,447-3-3 which includes commission and interest.

The defendant's pleadings and the issues which are material to the decision of this appeal are as follows:—The defendant admitted all the transactions set forth above except the two transactions of the 10th November 1917 but pleaded that they were wagering contracts being merely bargains for differences. He alleged that even if they were genuine the plaintiff did not tender the price and demand delivery and were, therefore, not entitled to damages. The issues are:—

"1 Whether plaintiffs agreed on 10th November 1917 to sell 100 khandis of sarki at Rs. 23-11-0 through one Ramgopal and again 100 khandis through one Bansidhar dalal as alleged?

7. Whether regarding the 200 khandis sarki, defendant authorised plaintiffs on 10th November 1917 as alleged?

"2. Whether the transactions between the parties were merely bargains for paying and receiving differences and are, therefore, wagering contracts which are void in law, or whether they were genuine transactions in which the parties intended actual delivery of goods?

"3. Whether plaintiffs ever demanded delivery of the goods in question from defendant?"

On Issues Nos. 1 and 7 the lower Court found that the plaintiffs did sell 200 khandis on the 10th November 1917 but not with the consent or authority of the defendant. On Issue No. 2 the lower Court held that the cotton transactions were wagering contracts but the cotton seed ones were not. It further held that, even if all the transactions were wagering, the plaintiffs as agents were entitled to recover what they had paid on the contracts on behalf of the defendants and their brokerage. On Issue No. 3 the lower Court found that the plaintiff did demand delivery at the time fixed for delivery by them to third parties. The plaintiffs' claim was partially decreed. The defendant has appealed and the plaintiffs have filed a cross-objection.

The appeal urges that the lower Court should have held that,—

(a) the cotton seed transactions were wagering contracts (grounds Nos. 1,2,5 and 6);

(b) no demand for delivery was made (ground No. 3); and

(c) plaintiffs had not made payments to third persons for losses on account of the transactions in question (ground No. 4).

As regards the point (a) I am of opinion that the cotton seed transactions were all wagering contracts. The parties did not intend to make an actual transfer of the goods but merely to pay and receive money according as the market price varied one way or another from the contract price of the given dates. The transactions were in lots of one hundred khandis each. The cotton seed was deliverable on one and the same date not only in the case of the contracts in dispute but apparently of all plaintiffs' contracts in Amraoti. The rate on the day of delivery was not to be the actual market-rate but a rate settled by panchas, that is, by the persons with whom contracts were made. All adatias were bound by this rate The object of fixing such a rate is to avoid possible excessive loss and probable ruin to some of the gamblers. Not a khandi of the seed sold was actually delivered.

The plaintiffs rely on Exhibit P-1. It is said that this letter implies that the plaintiffs had asked for delivery. I do not think there is any clear implication of demand from this letter. The defendant refused to settle the saoda then but said that he would pay the differences in January according to the general settlement in Amraoti and that if all in Amraoti made deliveries he would also deliver the goods. It seems from Exhibit P-2 that there was a demand for delivery of the cotton-seed shortly before the 17th January 1918 but I think it was not a genuine demand but only an attempt to give a colouring of genuineness to the transactions when the plaintiffs must have thought that they were certain to result in their favour. The defendant's reply shows that he considered the demand for delivery a thing not contemplated by the contract. The defendant had entered into other transactions admittedly wagering with the plaintiffs and these were entered in the same khata with the transactions in suit. Plaintiff No. 1, as P.W. No. 1, admits that the contract with the defendant was not for actual delivery of goods, that is hazar goods. He admits that "in no case of transactions made by me as adtiya for goods deliverable from 15th to 25th January, were any goods actually delivered. All agreed to settle profits or losses at Rs. 33 per khandi."

Rupees 33 was the rate settled by the panchas though the rate of sarki in the market was Rs. 34 to Rs. 35 per khandi on the date fixed for delivery. According to P. W. No. 2 it is customary in Amraoti that all sattas should be made through adatias. I believe the statement of defendant as D. W. No. 1 that he never intended to deliver the sarki but only meant to pay differences and that that was the understanding between him and the plaintiffs. I hold that the sarki contracts between the parties were wagering.

It is contended that the plaintiffs being merely agents if they paid up losses on defendant's behalf they are entitled to recover the amount paid from the defendant. Relationship, however, between pacca adatias and their constituents is not one of principal and agent but of principal and principal (vide Second Appeal No. 65-B of 1915 and First Appeal No. 53-B of 1916). The plaintiffs, therefore, are not entitled to recover anything from the defendant. On the finding that the transactions between the parties were wagering, the plaintiff's claim must fail. The appeal succeeds and the cross-objection, which is in respect of the transactions of the 10th November 1917, fails. The plaintiffs will pay the defendant's costs throughout.

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 61 (B), 242 (1) (a)—Notified area—Local Government, power of, to impose taxes, extent of.

The Local Government has no power under section 242 (1) (a) of the Punjab Municipal Act to impose in a Notified Area those taxes, which a Municipal Committee can only impose with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, and its powers are restricted to the imposition of the taxes detailed in section 61 (B) of the Act, for which only the previous sanction of the Local Government is required. ORDER.

Harrison, J.—The question referred for decision is whether the Local Government has power, under section 242 (1) (a) of the Punjab Municipal Act, to impose in a Notified Area those taxes, which a Municipal Committee can only impose with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, or whether its powers are restricted to the imposition of the taxes detailed in section 61 (B) of the Act, for which only the previous sanction of the Local Government is required. It is contended that, inasmuch as section 242 is silent as to the question of sanction the Local Government has under the Act taken upon itself the right reserved to the Governor-General in Council under section 61, that the fact that the section does not recite the substitution of the Local Government for the Governor-General in Council in so many words is immaterial inasmuch as the Act was assented to, and that if the only possible construction of the words used be that the necessity of obtaining the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council does not exist in Notified Areas that meaning must be given effect to. It appears to me that there is no force whatever in this argument and that the confusion, if any, is due to the failure to realise that the procedure in introducing taxation in Municipalities falls under two distinct heads or rather is divided into two consecutive chapters. In the first place, the sanction of the necessary authority has to be obtained and, until this has been done, the Municipal Committe does not function as an authority imposing taxation. It doubtless has to correspond with the sanctioning authority and to observe certain necessary preliminaries with a view to obtaining the sanction. When and if the sanction is obtained then, and not before, has a Municipal Committee any power to act under section 61. It then imposes the tax. In Notified Areas this latter action is performed by the Local Government and not by any Committee, but the fact that the Local Government is substituted for the Committee in no way alters the procedure. The material with which the imposing authority deals is the contemplated tax, as sanctioned, and the authorisation of the Local Government in section 242 to perform the functions of the Committee in this respect is clearly limited to the same field. It imposes what has been sanctioned. The fact that in a certain large class of taxes the Local Governent is itself the sanctioning authority does not affect the position. It can of course, at the same time, sanction and impose a tax, or it can even take for granted its own sanction, but the taxes, for the imposition of which the sanction of the Governor-General in Council is an indispensable preliminary condition, is still sacred, and until and unless that sanction has been obtained, the Local Government is powerless. The answer, therefore, to the question is that the powers conferred by section 242 are limited to the imposition of taxes described in section 61 (B).

Broadway, J.—I agree in the proposed answer to the Reference.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 5—Abatement, setting aside of—Sufficient ground—Appellant, duty of.

It is obligatory on an appellant to keep himself informed of any devolution of interest that may take place by reason of the death of any of the respondents and it is not sufficient for setting aside an abatement merely to say that the applicant had no knowledge of the death of the respondent till many months after such death. Abatement of appeal gives a very important right to the persons against whom the appeal abates and it is not without sufficient reason that the Court should set aside an abatement.

Application.

FIAZ AHMAD SHAH v. CHURCH MISSIONARY TRUST ASSOCIATION, LONDON.

ORDER.—This is an application for setting aside an abatement. It appears that respondent No. 6 died sometime in August 1922 and the application for abatement was not made till the 1st March 1923. The petitioner states that she had no knowledge of the death of the respondent till the 20th December 1922, that is to say, till the notices of the appeal were issued on the respondent and the peon went out to serve the notices.

Under a very loose practice which has grown up in this Court no care whatever is taken to specify the grounds on which an application for setting aside an abatement is made. The Code makes it obligatory on an appellant to keep himself informed of any devolution of interest that may take place by reason of the death of any of the respondents, and it is, in my opinion, not sufficient merely to say that the applicant had no knowledge of the death of the respondent till many months after such death. It must be remembered that the abatement of an appeal gives a very important right to the person or his heirs against whom the appeal abates and it is not without sufficient reason that the Court should set aside an abatement. So far as I am concerned, I shall require very strong grounds to induce me to set aside an abatement and shall pay not the slightest attention to a mere assertion that the applicant had no knowledge of the death of the respondent unless some reasons are assigned why the applicant did not keep himself informed of the death of the respondent.

So far as this application is concerned, it is not opposed and it appears that an applicant is a pardanashin lady. We allow the application and set aside the abatement in this case, but we must make it perfectly clear to the profession that we shall not entertain any application for setting aside an abatement unless good grounds are shown in support of such an application.

Pre-emption Custom—Outgrowth of mohalla or suburb, rule applicable to—Mohalla Hussain Agahi, Multan City.

There is no authority for the proposition that an accretion to or an outgrowth of an old sub-division of a town within the limits of the town is to be regarded as a new sub-division of it. [p. 912, col. 1.]

Allah Ditta v. Muhammad Nazir, 7 Ind. Cas. 716; 84 P. L. R. 1910; 102 P. W. R. 1910, Imperial Oil Soap and General Mills Co., Limited, Delhi v. Misbah-ud-din, 61 Ind. Cas. 325; 2 L. 83, distinguished.

It cannot be argued that a sub-division of a town cannot expand where its old boundary and the land adjoining it are divided by a steep declivity. An outgrowth or expansion can take place on adjoining land whether it be on the same level as the old town or on a lower or higher level as in the case of hilly places. [p. 912, col. 1.]

The custom of pre-emption prevails in Mohalla Hussain Agahi of Multan City. [p. 912, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Multan, dated the 16th December 1918.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for the Appellants.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Har Gopal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plot of land which is the subject of this pre-emption suit is situated in that low lying northern outskirt of the City of Multan which extends between two of its gates, the Lohari and Daulat Gates, and is hemmed in on the north by the Circular Road. The City proper to the south of this tract and the Fort to the north beyond the road are on much higher levels. The whole of this low expanse was originally vacant and was known as nazul property belonging to Government. Portions of it were from time to time leased, sold or gifted by Government for building purposes and it was in about 1873 that two large plots from it were gifted to the Church Missionary Society, and that body founded therein a school. Later on, in about 1915, the school was removed therefrom and the Society divided the land into small plots and offered the same for sale by public auction. Four of these plots were purchased by defendants Nos. 2 to 4, and it is only one of these four that the plaintiff's claim to pre-empt on the ground that it adjoins their land. The defence was that the custom of pre-emption did not obtain in this new suburb of the City which constituted a sub-division by itself and was known by the name bithar (low land). The plaintiffs contended, on the other hand, that the so-called bithar formed part of the sub-division Husain Agahi and was included in it. It was common ground in the Court below that the custom of pre-emption was in force in Husain Agahi and that being the position taken up by the parties, the decision of the case depended upon the answer to the question whether the land in dispute was within Husain Agahi or beyond it. The lower Court arrived at the conclusion that it was situated in bithar which was a separate sub-division and not a part of Husain Agahi and that no right of pre-emption was proved to exist in bithar. The suit was accordingly dismissed and the plaintiffs have come to this Court in first appeal.

Counsel for the defendants-respondents wanted to argue before us that the custom of pre-emption was not proved to obtain even in Husain Agahi, but we did not allow him to do so because, as stated in the judgment of the Court below, the existence of the custom in Husain Agahi was not denied by the defendants in that Court. Therefore, the only question before us is whether the part called bithar as an outgrowth of land is included in the sub-division Husain Agahi or is a separate sub-division by itself. There is ample documentary evidence on the record showing that the lands and houses in bithar are generally described as situated in Husain Agahi.

In the first place, in the notice of sale of plots issued by the local Agent of the Church Missionary Society the land was stated to be "situated at Husain Agahi."

Secondly, in the very deed by which the defendants purchased the four plots the land was stated to be situated in Husain Agahi. Similarly, in all other deeds of sale executed by the Agent of the Missionary Society the plots sold were stated to be situated in Husain Agahi.

Thirdly, the defendant Budhu Ram himself in the agreement dated the 15th September 1915 executed by him relating to a plot of nazul land, which is to the north-east of the land dispute, described it as situated in Husain Agahi.

Fourthly, there is the statement of the defendants' own witness Mr. M. N. Bannerji, Pleader, Multan, whose house is built on nazul land between Daulat and Lohari Gates, that he describes his house as situated in Husain Agahi.

Fifthly, there is the evidence of defendants' own witness, Bihari Lal, Sub-Overseer, Municipal Committee, Multan, who produced the Survey Map of Multan City, prepared in 1901, and the field book relating thereto, and stated, by a reference to these documents, that as against the survey stations 99, 5 R, 29 and 2 M. marked in the map, the entry in the field book is "in Husain Agahi." A glance at the map shows that the line connecting these four stations is just on the northern boundary of the entire land containing the Mission School building. This makes it clear that in 1901 this land was considered to be a part of Mohalla Husain Agahi. (See copy of this map Exhibit D-13, filed by the defendants).

Sixthly, there is the evidence afforded by the record of a pre-emption suit brought in 1910 by Jhandu, (P. W. No. 8), for possession a house situated in this bithar land. It was stated in the plaint that the house was in Husain Agahi and that the custom of pre-emption obtained in Husain Agahi in respect of houses. This house is marked as No. 1 in the plan, Exhibit P-16, and the plaint is printed at page 151 of the copy book The case ended in a compromise which is printed at page 49. In this compromise the house stated to be "situate at bithar near Dusehra Husain Agahi. Multan." The Dusehra ground is to the north of this house and it appears that this ground is known as Dusehra Husain

FIAZ AHMAD SHAH v. CHURCH MISSIONARY TRUST ASSOCIATION, LONDON.

Agahi as stated in the deed of compromise.

As against this mass of documentary evidence which, it is important to note, comprises:—

(1) defendants' own title deed P-3;

(2) the agreement executed by one of the defendants in September 1915 P-11; and

(3) the Survey Map D-13 produced by their own witness, Bihari Lal,

All that defendants' Counsel could urge was that in certain deeds of sale of nazul plots executed by the Deputy Commissioner of Multan, the plots sold were stated to be situated inside Lohari gate and not in Husain Agahi and that in the registers of nazul lands prepared in 1864, 1871 and 1901 the land in dispute was shown to be inside Lohari gate. But there is nothing to show that the land inside Lohari gate lying between Husain Agahi Bazar and the Circular Road was not within Mohalla Husain Agahi. The lower Court discarded all this evidence, and referring to the old history of the City as given in the Multan Gazetteer according to which this low lying land was once the site of a ditch or the bed of the river Ravi, arrived at the conclusion that the high level border of the City was its old boundary, that the new abadi in the hollow below it could not be a part of the old Mohalla Husain Agahi and that the plaintiffs, in order to succeed in their suit, should have established the existence of a custom of pre-emption in this part but had failed to do so. We are of opinion that this conclusion is based on wrong premises. There is no authority for the proposition that an accretion to or an overgrowth of an old sub-division of a town within the limits of that town is to be regarded as a new sub-division of it, though there are rulings to the effect that new suburbs beyond the limits of a town constitute new sub-divisions. In Allah Ditta v. Muhammad Nazir (1) it was held that a new abadi within the old Mauza Garhi Awan though on the borders of the town of Hafizabad and now a part of that town was to be regarded as a new sub-division. Similarly, in Imperial Oil Soap and General Mills Co., Limited, Delhi v. Misbah-ud-din (2) the land pre-empted was originally within the limits of the village Kotandrat Kalan outside the walls of Delhi but now formed a suburb of Delhi and was known as Pahar Ganj. It was, therefore, held that this new suburb outside the City constituted a new sub-division. These two rulings, therefore, which are cited by the respondents' Counsel are distinguishable and do not apply to the present case, as here the new abadi is a natural expansion of the old City within its limits which are now defined by the Circular Road. It cannot be argued that a sub-division of a City cannot expand where its old boundary and the land adjoining it are divided by a steep declivity. An outgrowth or expansion can take place on the adjoining land whether it be on the same level as the old town or on a lower or higher level as in the case of hilly places. The evidence reviewed above fully establishes that this low lying land was by general acceptance situated within Husain Agahi and the defendants could not show that it was ever previously asserted that it was not within that Mohalla. We, therefore, find that the land in dispute is situated within Husain Agahi and that the custom of pre-emption prevails in that Mohalla.

It may be stated here that the custom of pre-emption has been held to prevail generally not only in the Multan City but also in its new suburbs known as 'Taraf Ravi' and 'Berun Pak Darwaza' vide Abdulla v. Punnu Ram (3) and Ghulam Murtaza v. Rupa Mal (4). Of the four judicial instances cited in the present case three relate to houses which are admittedly within the old Mohalla Husain Agahi. Having regard to all this and the defendants' admission, it may safely be concluded that the custom of pre-emption does obtain in the sub-division Husain Agahi.

There remains to be decided the question of price. The Commissioners appointed to determine the market-value of the land in suit estimated its value at Rs. 12,000 and this valuation was accepted by the plaintiffs, but the lower Court increased it to Rs. 13,000. We are of opinion that according to the rates found by the Commissioner and referred to by the Court below the value could not be less than Rs. 13,000. We, therefore, accept the appeal and, reversing the judgment and decree of the Court below, grant the plaintiffs a decree for possession of the land on payment in the Court below of Rs. 13,000 less costs in both Courts, on or before the 10th of August next. In default the suit will stand dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to this suit out of which the present appeal arises are Brahmins of village Chandpur in the Jhajjar Tahsil of the Rohtak District. They are members of an agricultural tribe and it is admitted that they follow custom. There is no dispute as to natural relationship, and the only question for determination in this appeal is, whether the land in respect of which the plaintiffs seek a declaration is ancestral qua them. Such a question is one of fact, but the appeal has been admitted on the ground that the finding arrived at by the lower Court was not based on any evidence, but was a mere conjecture. In Atar Singh v. Thakar Singh (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that the party asserting the land to be ancestral must prove the fact, it not being possible to accept mere conjectures as substitutes for proof.

I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that in this case the property has not been shown to be ancestral. The history of the village shows that in 1840 all the proprietors, including Nathu Ram, the common ancestor of the parties, left the village and took up their residence elsewhere. For a period of 25 years the village site was be chiragh and the fields untilled. Thereafter, certain of the descendants of the previous proprietors, including the son of Nathu Ram, returned to the village and commenced cultivation. It does not appear to me to be possible to distinguish this case from that reported as Manohar v. Nanhi (2) where it was held in similar circumstances that the land must be regarded as the self-acquired property of the persons who returned to the village 25 years after its desertion. There is nothing in this case to show that Kewal Ram actually resumed possession of the same land as had been held by his father Nathu Ram, but even if it could be assumed that he did, the possession was nonetheless a re-acquisition, and the land was divested of its ancestral character. As Kewal Ram is not a common ancestor it follows that the plaintiffs cannot challenge an alienation made in respect of it.

An attempt has been made to distinguish the authority quoted on two grounds (a) that in this case the proprietors left the village because of famine, and (b) that they retained throughout the period of 25 years, the animus of returning. Neither of these distinctions are of substance. It is not stated why, in the case quoted, the proprietors deserted their village, but it may be assumed that it was for some similar reason, while it can hardly be believed in the absence of any proof that famine conditions subsisted for a period of 25 years. There is nothing to support the theory in this case any more than in the authority referred to that the proprietors intended to return sooner or later.

It follows that as the plaintiffs have no locus standi to challenge the alienation in question the appeal must be accepted, and plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs throughout.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 219—Communal land—Trespasser—Suit for ejectment—Civil Court, jurisdiction of—Powers of Deputy Commissioner.

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to try a suit by a malguzar to eject a trespasser from land set apart by an entry in the Administration Paper of the village for the communal purpose of a cattle stand, upon a portion of which he alleges the trespasser has encroached by the erection of a building. The Deputy Commissioner cannot determine the right to exclude a trespasser from a communal land permanently under section 219 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act. He can eject him summarily. The jurisdiction of the Civil Court to determine such a right has been expressly saved under the section.

Appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 24th June 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 11 of 1922.

Mr. P. S. Deva, for the Appellants.
Mr. D. P. Tiwari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is brought by a malguzar to eject the defendants from land set apart by an entry in the Administration Paper of his village for the communal purpose of a cattle stand, upon a portion of which he alleges they have encroached by the erection of a building on it. The defendants raised the objection that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was barred by section 220 of the Land Revenue Act, 1917, because the Deputy Commissioner was empowered by section 219 of the same Act to dispose of the matter in dispute. This plea prevailed in the first Court and the suit was dismissed, but in appeal the dismissal was set aside and the suit was remanded for trial on its merits.

2. The defendants have appealed against the order of remand, but a mere perusal of section 219, on which they rely, establishes that the appeal has no susbtance. The right to exclude a trespasser on communal land permanently, which is in question here, is not a matter which the Deputy Commissioner can determine under that section; he can only eject him summarily, and the section itself expressly saves the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to decide the question of the right of permanent exclusion.

3. The plea seems to have been taken, as is so often done, merely because it was seen to be a possible plea in the case, without any consideration of the advantage the defendants might derive from its success. If it succeeded, the plaintiff would merely have to make an application to the Deputy Commissioner under section 219, wherein his chances of success or failure would be exactly the same as in the present suit and the proceedings would probably be shorter and simpler and less costly; indeed, it is somewhat surprising that he did not choose that alternative of the two allowed him.

4. The learned Pleader for the defendants admits that if the defendant succeeded before the Deputy Commissioner the plaintiff could still file this same suit over again, and the defendants would be exactly where they were. He explains, however, that before the Deputy Commissioner the defendants would have the advantage of being able to ask that the land on which they have built should be included in the abadi under section 71, and clause (d) of section 106 of the Land Revenue Act. Assuming that section 46 of the same Act and the opposition of the malguzar do not doom any such application to failure, there seems to be no reason why the defendants should not make it while this suit is in progress; an order making the plot in dispute a part of the abadi would defeat the plaintiff's claim as completely in the Civil Court as before the Deputy Commissioner.

5. But it is quite clear that, if the plaintiff chooses to bring this suit in a Civil Court, instead of seeking the simpler remedy provided for him by the Land Revenue Act, he is entitled to do so and the Civil Court has jurisdiction to try the suit. The appeal will accordingly be dismissed. The appellants must pay all the costs incurred by their respondent in this Court.

Indian Soldiers Litigation Act (IX of 1918), s. 11, meaning and applicability of—Plaintiff who has ceased to be Indian Soldier, whether can take advantage of provision—Intention of Legislature—Interpretation of Statutes.

If the language of a Statute is clear and unambiguous the Court must give effect to it and has no right to extend its operation in order to carry out the real or supposed intention of the Legislature. [p. 916, col. 1.]

The Legislature in enacting the Indian Soldiers Litigation Act intended to provide for the special protection in respect of civil and revenue litigation of Indian Soldiers serving under War conditions and contemplated that a person's right to have recourse to a Court of Law should not be adversely affected by reason of his serving as a soldier under War conditions. It was consequently provided that the period of such service should be excluded from the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, appeal or application which he might bring before a Court of Law and it was intended that the period of limitation should not run against him during the time he was serving under War conditions. [p. 916, col. 1.]

The language of Section 11 of the Indian Soldiers Litigation Act, however, embraces only those cases in which the plaintiff is an Indian Soldier at the time of the institution of the suit, and the mere fact that he was a soldier for some time during the period of limitation prescribed for the suit does not benefit him if he has ceased to be a soldier on the date of the institution of the suit. [p. 917, col. 1.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Martineau, passed in Civil Appeal No. 2629 of 1921, dated the 6th June 1922, reversing that of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 11th August 1921.

Dr. G. C. Narang and Mr. Anant Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. R. Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action brought in December 1920, for the pre-emption of a plot of land sold in 1918. It is admitted that the suit is barred by limitation unless the plaintiff satisfies the requirements of section 11 of the Indian Soldiers' Litigation Act, IX of 1918. Now, the aforesaid section provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application, to any Court in which the plaintiff-appellant or applicant is an Indian solider, the time during which such soldier has been serving under War conditions, since the 4th of August 1914, shall be excluded. The plaintiff had undoubtedly served as a soldier under War conditions for sometime before the institution of the suit, but he was demobilised in March 1920, and it is admitted that he was no longer a soldier when he brought the present action.

The learned Judge in Chambers has held that, as the plaintiff was not a soldier on the date of the institution of the suit, he could not avail himself of the benefit of the said section. There can be no doubt that the Legislature in enacting this law intended to provide for the special protection, in respect of Civil and revenue litigation, of Indian soldiers serving under War conditions and contemplated that a person's right to have recourse to a Court of Law should not be adversely affected by reason of his serving as a soldier under War conditions. It was consequently provided that the period of such service should be excluded from the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, appeal or application which he might bring before a Court of Law. It was clearly intended that the period of limitation should not run against him during the time he was serving under War conditions.

If this was the object of the Legislature, there is no cogent reason why a person who has earned the concession indicated above should lose it simply because he has ceased to be a soldier at the time he invokes the aid of the Court. It is, however, manifest that if the language of a Statute is clear and unambiguous, the Court must give effect to it and has no right to extend its operation in order to carry out the real or supposed intention of the Legislature.

"When the language is not only plain but admits of but one meaning, the task of interpretation can hardly be said to arise. It is not allowable, says Vattel, to interpret what has no need of interpretation. Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. Such language best declares, without more, the intention of the lawgiver, and is decisive of it. The Legislature must be intended to mean what it has plainly expressed, and consequently there is no room for construction. It matters not, in such a case, what the consequences may be. Where by the use of clear and unequivocal language capable of only one meaning, anything is enacted by a Legislature, it must be enforced, even though it be absurd or mischievous. The underlying principle being that the meaning and intention of a Statute must be collected from the plain and unambiguous expressions used therein rather than from any notions which may be entertained by the Court as to what is just or expedient. If the words go beyond what was probably the intention, effect must nevertheless be given to them. They cannot be construed, contrary to their meaning, as embracing or excluding cases merely because no good reason appears why they should be excluded or embraced. However unjust, arbitrary or inconvenient the meaning conveyed may be, it must receive its full effect. When once the meaning is plain, it is not the province of a Court to scan its wisdom or its policy. Its duty is not to make the law reasonable, but to expound it as it stands, according to the real sense of the words." (Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, Sixth Edition, pages 5 to 8). The same author sums up the position in the following words:—

"In short, when the words admit of but one meaning, a Court is not at liberty to speculate on the intention of the Legislature, and to construe them according to its own notions of what ought to have been enacted. Nothing could be more dangerous than to make such considrations the ground for construing an enactment that is unambiguous in itself. To depart from the meaning on account of such views, is, in truth, not to construe the Act but to alter it. But the business of the interpreter is not to improve the Statute it is to expound it. The question for him is not what the Legislature meant, but what its language means, i. e., what the Act has said that it meant. To give a construction contrary to, or different from, that which the words import, or can possibly import, is not to interpret law, but to make it, and Judges are to remember that their office is jus dicere, not jus dare."

Now, the language of the section embraces only those cases in which the plaintiff is an Indian soldier at the time of the institution of the suit, and it appears that the mere fact that he was a soldier for some time during the period of limitation prescribed for the suit does not benefit him if he has ceased to be a soldier on the date of institution of the suit. The learned Counsel for the plaintiff asks us to place a beneficial construction upon the section, but no rule of interpretation can be invoked for the purpose if including cases plainly omitted from the natural meaning of the words. As pointed out by Maxwell at page 26: "A case not provided for in a Statute is not to be dealt with merely because there seems no good reason why it should have been omitted, and the omission appears consequently to have been unintentional." It may be a casus omissus, but it is obviously for the Legislature, and not for the Court, to remedy the defect.

We are constrained to hold that the plaintiff's case does not come within section 11 of the Indian Soldiers Litigation Act. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 45—Joint promise to pay—Suit by one promisee for share, whether lies—Consolidation of suits by different plaintiffs—Powers of Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151.

Under section 45 of the Contract Act in regard to a promise to pay made to two or more persons jointly, proceedings to enforce the claim must be taken by all promisees and a suit for his share of the amount brought by one of several promisees is liable to be dismissed. [p. 918, col. 2; p. 919, col. 1.]

Under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code a Court has inherent power to consolidate suits, and it should adopt this procedure where suits are brought by different plaintiffs for the recovery of debts which formed originally one whole, but were split up subsequently on account of the dissolution of the firm to which they were due. [p. 919, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 10th February 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 154 of 1921.

Mr. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., for the Appellants.

Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment also disposes of Second Appeals Nos. 221 and 222 of 1922. There was a firm called Meghraj-Mansukhdas with which the first defendant Chendba is said to have had dealings and to whom he owed money. That firm divided into three separate firms and each firm represented by the owner, a former partner in Meghraj-Mansukhdas, has filed a separate suit to recover one-third of the money due to the firm of Meghraj-Mansukhdas by Chendba.

A preliminary objection was raised that the suit was not maintainable because all three as representing the old firm of Meghraj-Mansukhdas now dissolved should have sued in one suit for the money due by the defendant if any. Defendant relied on section 45 of the Contract Act and O. II, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The Trial Court in an interesting judgment held that the partnership though dissolved continued for the purposes of winding-up its affairs and as none of the partners are dead one suit must be brought for the whole of the amount which the partners claimed jointly and each partner cannot maintain a separate suit for the shares said to have come to him in the original firm. I may add that each plaintiff made his former two partners co-defendants in the suits.

On appeal the District Judge, Wardha' has upheld the finding of the Trial Court and dismissed the three appeals. It was urged in that Court that the plaintiffs should have been given an opportunity to amalgamate all the suits but the Judge refused it stating:—

"In the first place, I do not see how claims by independent plaintiffs can be amalgamated. In the next place, I see no reason to think that the omission was due to inadvertence. The plaintiffs must have known that the ordinary procedure for recovery of a debt is for the creditors to join in filing a suit. They took the curious course which they did take at their own risk. I must refuse to allow amalgamation."

This plea of amalgamation was apparently never raised in the Trial Court.

As regards another plea raised in the lower Appellate Court, the Judge writes:—

"The last plea is rather ingenious. It is suggested that the three plaintiffs jointly might be allowed to press one of the claims. In each suit the names of the three plaintiffs appear one as plaintiff and two as defendants. But the subject-matter of the suit is a sum in which it is still asserted that only one plaintiff has an interest. It is too late to change the subject-matter of the suit and allow the three plaintiffs to sue for one-third share of the joint debt; this third being made up of three equal sums from the share of the three plaintiffs. It seems clear that in the particular circumstances of the case it would not have been proper to make the defendants plaintiffs, as it was all along stated that the defendants were entitled to no share of the sum claimed by the plaintiff. But, as a matter of fact, no such application was made to the first Court. Such an application involved the dismissal of the other suits and these suits were being passed. Even now the appellants do not clearly state that they desire the dismissal of two of the suits and will not file an appeal with regard to these appeals. I, therefore, reject the application made at a very late stage and with apparent reservations."

It is here pressed that there is no section in the Civil Procedure Code to compel persons to sue jointly for a debt due at one time to more than one person. Reliance is placed on O. I, rule 9, Civil Procedure Code, and it is urged that no suit can be defeated by reason of misjoinder or non-joinder of parties. Nagorao v. Nago (1), Bhag Mal-Saddu Ram v. Walla (2) are is quoted as authority for showing that a partner of a firm dissolved can still sue for his individual share of a debt. The facts in the Punjab case were very different to those in the present case: there one person recovered by a decree one-fifth of the debt and his remaining partners were then allowed to sue for four-fifths share of the debt. In the present case it is fairly apparent that the defendants have deliberately split up the debt and brought three separate suits to harass the defendant; the fact that the three suits were filed on the same date and by the same Pleader points strongly to this being the truth.

It is argued that section 45 of the Contract Act does not prevent the suits being brought in their present form and section 37 of the Transfer of Property Act and Sambhusa v. Gopal (3), Sanwale Singh v. Ganeshi Lal (4) and Ganeshi Lal v. Charan Singh (5) are quoted. The last two cases refer to mortgage suits and do not seem applicable here. Shamsundar v. Kunjoban (6) a case of joint damage and Harihar Pershad v. Bholi Pershad (7) are said to support the appellants' argument.

It is further contended that under the analogy of section 7 of the Limitation Act the three suits have been rightly brought and it is pressed that in any case amalgamation or consolidation of the three suits should be allowed under the principle enunciated in Kali Charan Dutt v. Manodabala Dasi [Surja Kumar Mondal] (8).

I am very clearly of opinion that under section 45 of the Contract Act in regard to a promise made to two or more persons jointly proceedings to enforce the claim must be taken by all promisees and that a suit brought by one of several joint creditors or partners is liable to be dismissed. The preliminary objection raised in all three cases has been rightly sustained.

But the further question arises whether the lower Appellate Court should not have allowed the plaintiff to consolidate the suits and to try the whole matter as one suit. That the Court had the power under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is apparent and I think that procedure should be followed in the present case. I allow the appeals to that extent and direct that the Trial Court do consolidate the three suits and then try them. That Court must be careful to allow only one set of costs. As the two appeals are entirely due to the method in which the three plaintiffs attempted to collect their one-third share of the debt said to be due by the defendant, I direct that the costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court be borne by the three plaintiffs. They will pay their own and Chendba defendant's costs in both these Courts. Costs in the Trial Court will abide the result.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. XXXIV, rr. 7, 8—Redemption suit—Preliminary decree—Failure of plaintiff to pay decretal amount, effect of—Second suit for redemption, maintainability of—Resjudicata.

Where a plaintiff obtains a decree for redemption of a mortgage by payment into Court of a certain sum within a certain time and then takes no steps towards making such payment and the period fixed elapses without any payment being made, a second suit to redeem on payment of the self-same sum is not barred by the rule of res judicata. [p. 920, col. 1.]

Shibbu Mul v. Paira Sing, 86 P. R. 1877, Dhanpat Mal v. Jhaggar Singh, 93 P. R. 1908; 164 P. L. R. 1908; 133 P. W. R. 1908 (F. B.), followed.

A preliminary decree in a redemption suit provided that if the plaintiff failed to pay the amount mentioned in the decree within the time limited "he shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property." Nothing further was done under the decree either by the plaintiff or by the defendant:

Held, that a second suit by the plaintiff to redeem the property was not barred by res judicata by virtue merely of the clause in the previous decree having the right of redemption, as there was no final determination in that suit of the issue whether the plaintiff's failure to pay the redemption price within the period fixed by the Court would terminate the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee and further as such an adjudication was not necessary for the decision of the suit. [p. 920, cols. 1 & 2.]

A preliminary decree in a redemption suit ought not to direct more than that if the plaintiff makes a default, the mortgagee should have a right to ask for a final decree for foreclosure or sale as provided by r. 8 of O. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 921, col. 1.]

Case-law discussed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 12th August 1922, affirming, except as to costs, that of the Additional Munsif, First Class, Kangra at Dharmsala, dated the 26th June 1922.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 9th April 1890, Shibbu and others mortgaged 32 kanals 19 marlas of land with possession to Phati and Jai Gopal. There was a subsequent advance made on the same security on the 24th August 1899 and in 1914 the representatives of the mortgagor sued for redemption and obtained a preliminary decree by which it was ordered that if the plaintiffs paid into Court the sum of Rs. 489 on or before the 2nd of January 1910, the defendants "shall deliver up to the plaintiffs or to any such person as they may appoint, all documents in their possession or power relating to the land in suit and shall, if so required, re-transfer the property to the plaintiffs free from mortgage and from all incumbrances and shall put the plaintiffs into possession of the property, and further that if the payment of Rs. 489 be not made on or before the day aforesaid the plaintiffs shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property."

On this decree no action was taken by either party. The plaintiffs made no payment and the defendants made no application for a final decree, SUNKA v. JHARU.

On the 6th May 1922, Jharu, one of the plaintiffs in the previous suit, sued again for possession of the same land by redemption on payment of Rs. 489. He was met with a plea that his second suit did not lie but both the Trial Court and the learned District Judge to whom the point was taken on appeal have held that the second suit was competent and the plaintiff was granted a decree.

The defendants have come to this Court on second appeal urging that the first decree debarred the plaintiff from maintaining a second suit.

The Courts below pointed out that the condition attached to the former decree that the plaintiff on failure to pay the mortgage price by the day fixed should be debarred from redeeming was illegal and it is certainly not in accordance with what is laid down in O. XXXIV, rr. 7 and 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The mortgage was a usufructuary mortgage and the proper order to pass was that, in default of payment by the mortgagor on or before the due date, the mortgaged property should be sold. It is contended nevertheless for the appellant that the decree, right or wrong, was not appealed from and, therefore, is a final adjudication in the right of the plaintiffs to redeem.

It was ruled in Shibbu Mul v. Paira Sing (1) and a Full Bench in Dhanpat Mal v. Jhaggar Singh (2) affirmed the principle laid down as stating correctly the law to be followed in this Province, that when a plaintiff has obtained a decree for redemption of mortgage by payment into Court of a certain sum within a certain time and when no steps have been taken by the plaintiff towards making such payment and the period fixed elapses without any payment being made, still a second suit to redeem on payment of the self-same sum is not barred by the rule of res judicata. We have here, however, an additional finding in the first suit that failure to make payment shall debar the plaintiff from all right to redeem in future.

The appellants rely strongly on two rulings. The first Lachman Singh v. Madsudan (3) where it was held that an order declaring that the plaintiff's right to redeem shall be extinguished upon non-payment, within the time limited by a decree for redemption, of the amount found due is not a proper order when the mortgage sought to be redeemed is a usufructuary mortgage but that, nevertheless, where such an order has been made and the decretal amount has not been paid within the time limited and the decree has been allowed to become final, the plaintiff cannot thereafter bring a second suit for redemption. The other case is Kushaba Ramji Thoke v. Budhaji Sakaram (4) and was to the same effect. Both cases, however, dealt with previous decrees passed not under O. XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure but under section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act before the present Code of Civil Procedure was enacted, and the Bombay case makes it clear that the Judges were not prepared to hold that a decree passed under section 92 is precisely the same as a preliminary decree passed under O. XXXIV, r. 7.

In Ramji Bapuji Patil v. Pandharinath Ravji (5) the majority of a Full Bench decided that a mortgagor who had brought a suit for redemption and obtained a decree nisi which neither the mortgagor nor the mortgagee had applied to be made absolute, can, after the execution of that decree is time-barred, bring a fresh suit for redemption. This was also a case of a previous decree under section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, and was distinguished on its own facts in Kushaba Ramji Thoke v. Budhaji Sakaram (4) because the decree was one directing that on failure to pay the redemption money by a certain date the defendant should recover the amount by sale of the property. The minority Judge, Mr. Justice Shah, who was hostile to a second suit and who was one of the Bench which afterwards decided Kushaba Ramji Thoke v. Budhaji Sakaram (4) was careful in his dissenting judgment to point out that, when a preliminary decree is passed under O. XXXIV, r. 7, the situation is not the same as when a decree is passed under section 92 of the Transfer of Property Act, and to say that the question whether a second redemption suit can be brought where the party has already obtained a preliminary decree and there has been no final decree, did not arise in the case under discussion.

For the respondents a third Bombay case has been cited, Rama Tulsa v. Bhagchand Motiram (6). That dealt with a suit for sale under a mortgage-decree in which the defendant was given six months' time to pay the decretal-debt and in default the plaintiff was to recover the decretal-debt by sale of the mortgaged property. It was held that, when the defendant had failed to pay within six months and the mortgagee had failed to apply for a decree absolute, the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee was not put an end to and that there was nothing to prevent the mortgagor from filing another suit for redemption. In that case the previous decree had also been passed before the enactment of the present Code of Civil Procedure and all these cases merely serve to show that there has been divergence of opinion in the Bombay High Court on the question whether a second suit for redemption can be brought when the first suit was decreed before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force.

It seems to me that in a case of the nature of that under consideration the right of redemption could not be extinguished by the preliminary decree and could only be extinguished by a final decree. It was pointed out by Sir Norman Macleod, C. J., in Kushaba Ramji Thoke v. Budhaji Sakaram (4) that there is a certain amount of inconsistency between rr. 7 and 8 of O. XXXIV and that, properly speaking, a preliminary decree ought not to direct more than that, if the plaintiff makes a default, the mortgagee should have a right to ask for a final decree for foreclosure or sale as provided for by r. 8. Thus the Munsif who passed the preliminary decree of the 30th June 1915 which is alleged to bar the present suit, by his use of the word 'preliminary' should be regarded as having given the defendants in that suit merely a right to come into Court later and ask for a final decree that the plaintiff is no longer entitled to redeem and that the mortgage has come to an end.

The real test lies in the terms of section 11 of the Code. Was there in the 1914 suit any hearing or final determination of an issue whether the plaintiffs failure to pay the redemption price within a period fixed by the Court terminated the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee? It does not appear from the Munsif's judgment that this was "alleged by one party and either denied or admitted expressly or impliedly by the other." In fact, the plaintiff, had he advanced such a plea, would have been met by the obvious retort that there was nothing in law to support it. Again, it was in no way necessary for the passing of a preliminary decree that such a question should be adjudicated upon. What actually happened is clear. After deciding that there was a mortgage in favour of the defendants and determining the amount of the charge the Munsif was intelligent enough to know that the correct form of decree to be passed would be found in O. XXXIV, and he was zealous enough to look up the text of that order, but then he either misread or misunderstood it.

Having regard to what was laid down by the Full Bench in Dhanpat Mal v. Jhaggar Singh (2) and to the actual terms of O. XXXIV, rr. 7 and 8, I hold that the question of the plaintiff's right to redeem the property now in suit was not finally decided by the previous decree of 30th June 1915. I affirm the decision of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 384 OF 1922.

June 28, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Piggott.

MAN SINGH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

RAM NATH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 29, 96, 120—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 142—Suit for compensation for seizure of crops under decree ultimately set aside—Limitation—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of.

A distraint effected under the Agra Tenancy Act is a seizure of moveable property under legal process. [p. 923, col. 2.]

M. brought a suit against R. for arrears of rent under the Agra Tenancy Act claiming that the latter was his tenant in respect of certain land. The Trial Court dismissed the suit but it was decreed by the first Appellate Court; R. preferred a second appeal which was decided in his favour, but in the meanwhile M. had levied rent from R. by means of the process of distraint provided by the Tenancy Act. Semetime afterwards, R. brought a suit against M. claiming the amount of the payment levied from him by the latter together with interest;

Held, (1) that assuming the suit to be cognizable by a Civil Court, it was governed by Art. 29 of the Limitation Act and not by Art. 96 or Art. 120 of the Act; [p. 923, col. 1.]

(2) that the seizure of the crops by M. was under a legal process and was wrongful even though M. had at the time a decree of a Court in favour of his title; [p. 923, col. 1.]

(3) that the proper course for R. was to have proceeded under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(4) Obiter—that the suit was not cognizable by a Civil Court as it was in substance a suit for compensation for wrongful restraint for which provision was made in section 142 of the Agra Tenancy Act. [p. 924, col. 2.]

Article 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act should never be invoked if there is any other Article in the Schedule which upon reasonable interpretation of its language covers the particular suit with which the Court is dealing. [p. 924, col. 1.]

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Meerut, dated the 8th February 1922.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant to the present suit had brought a suit against the present plaintiff for arrears of rent under the Tenancy Act, claiming that the latter was his tenant in respect of certain land. The Trial Court dismissed that suit, but it was decreed by the District Judge on first appeal on the 18th of July 1916. Against that decree Ram Nath, the present plaintiff, appealed to this Court. Unfortunately, his appeal was not disposed of until the 19th of December 1918, when the decision of the District Judge was reversed and the decree of the Trial Court dismissing the suit was restored. There was an appeal against this decision under the Letters Patent, but that appeal failed. In the interval between the 18th of July 1916 and the 19th of December 1918, the present defendant, Man Singh, had taken advantage of the position which he occupied as holding a decree for rent passed by the District Judge, to realise the rent of the same land from Ram Nath, for each of three successive years, by means of the process of distraint provided by section 119 and the following sections of the Local Tenancy Act (No. II of 1901). In each case, as soon as the standing crops were distrained by Man Singh under his alleged proprietary right, Ram Nath paid up the arrears of rent on account of which the distraint had been effected. The dates of payment are given as the 13th of December 1916, the 18th of January 1918 and the 3rd of January 1919. When the decree of the District Judge was reversed on appeal it does not seem to have occurred to Ram Nath to consider whether relief in respect of the payments thus obtained from him on the strength of the erroneous decree of the District Judge, could not be obtained by means of a claim for damages or compensation, preferred to the Court of first instance, under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure. At any rate, that point has not been raised in the present litigation and is not before me for consideration. Ram Nath waited until the 12th of July 1921, when he instituted the present suit, claiming a total sum of Rs. 550 on account of the payments which he had made in consequence of the three distraints levied by Man Singh, together with interests by way of damages. In defence Man Singh pleaded that the suit as brought was not cognisable by the Civil Court, and that, in any event, the claim was barred by limitation. Both these pleas have been repelled by both the Courts below and both are raised before me in second appeal. I think it will simplify the decision of this appeal if I deal first with the question of limitation. Assuming for the present, that this was a suit the cognizance of which by the Court in which it was instituted was barred, neither by the second clause of section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure, nor by section 167 of the Tenancy Act (Local Act No. II of 1901), the question is, what Article of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act is to be considered applicable to the plaintiff's cause of action. In the Courts below Art. 96 of the Schedule seems to have been suggested on the plaintiff's behalf. That Article is, in my opinion, inapplicable. The plaintiff did not make these payments under any mistake. He knew that Man Singh was not really his landlord in respect of the land the produce of which had been taken in distraint. His position was that there had been an erroneous decision by the District Judge, affirming in favour of Man Singh a right which the latter did not possess, and that he himself was prosecuting an appeal against that erroneous decision. I find myself quite unable to formulate the mistake on the ground of which it is suggested that Ram Nath made these payments. The plaintiff, however, is on safer ground when he falls back on Art. 120 of the Schedule and challenges the defendant to suggest some other Article as applicable to the present suit. Obviously, unless some other Article can be found, the plaintiff is entitled to avail himself of Article 120. It cannot be denied that he had a cause of action against Man Singh on account of these payments, whatever controversy there may be on the question whether he has availed himself of his proper remedy in law. If, therefore, no other Article of the Schedule can be suggested, the suit must be referred to Art. 120 and is within time. The defendant has suggested Art. 29 of the aforesaid Schedule, and this seems to me the Article which obviously applies to the case. Its provisions can only be avoided on one of the two contentions; either (a) that Man Singh's seizure of the growing crops on Ram Nath's land was not wrongful at the time when it took place; or (b) that it was not a seizure effected under legal process. In my opinion the seizure was undoubtedly wrongful. It has now been determined between the parties that Man Singh was not the landholder, nor was Ram Nath his tenant in respect of the land on which the crops distrained upon were growing. Man Singh had no right to distrain those crops on a claim for arrears of rent which were not in fact due to him. His seizure was nonetheless wrongful because it was done on the strength of an erroneous judicial decision in his favour which has since been reversed in appeal. The lower Appellate Court has avoided the applicability of this Article by saying that a distraint under the Local Tenancy Act is not a seizure of property under legal process. The right of distraint is a special right conferred upon landholders in this Province by the provisions of the Tenancy Act. The right has to be exercised in accordance with law, and a landholder who deviates from the provisions which regulate the whole process of distraint is liable to have to defend a suit for compensation under the first clause of section 146 of the Tenancy Act. A notice has to be served on the tenant through the Court and, under certain circumstances, assistance may be obtained from an officer deputed by the Court in making the distraint. We do not know in the present case if such assistance was invoked by Man Singh on any one of the three occasions which have given the plaintiff his cause of action for the present suit; but the point does not appear material. In my opinion a distraint effected under the Local Tenancy Act, (No. II of 1901), is a seizure of moveable property under legal process, because it is done under the special provisions of the Local Act and subject to the due observance of the procedure therein laid down. Unfortunately this finding of mine on the question of limitation is in itself fatal to the plaintiff's suit. I do not deny the force of the contention that Ram Nath was put in a difficulty by reason of the long interval of time which elapsed before the erroneous decision given against him by the District Judge in the suit for arrears of rent was set right by this Court on second appeal. Nevertheless, it seems to me that, if he had any faith in the justice of his cause or in the legal acumen of this Court he could have protected himself in a variety of ways. In any event, it was incumbent on him to consider carefully the limitation period applicable to any suit which he might think of bringing. There was no reason why he should not, after this Court's decision of December the 19th, 1918, have taken prompt action, at any rate with regard to the distraint levied upon him in the first month of that same year. Nor do I altogether understand why, in any possible view of the case, he submitted to the distraint levied a year later. Presumably, before he made this payment on the 3rd of January 1919, he knew of the decision in his favour pronounced by this Cour 15 days earlier. Whatever may be said about his failure to contest the other two distraints, he would have been on strong ground if he had adopted the remedy provided for him by the Tenancy Act itself in respect of the last of the three distraints. As regards the first distraint, in connection with which he made his payment of the 13th of December 1916, it would have been possible for Ram Nath to have brought a suit for the recovery of that money within 12 months of the distraint, or of the payment, and to have asked the Trial Court to suspend the decision of that suit until the determination of the appeal then pending in this Court. Whatever sympthy I may feel for the plaintiff in this suit, I cannot stretch the provisions of the Indian Limitation Act in his favour when they seem to me to be clearly against him. Article 120 of the First Schedule to the said Act should never be invoked if there is any other Article in the Schedule which, upon a reasonable interpretation of its language, seems to cover the particular suit with which the Court is dealing, and, in my opinion, Art. 29 obviously covers the present suit supposing it to be one cognizable at all by the Court in which it was instituted.

This brings me to the other point raised by the appellant on which I do not propose to say much, because the result of the appeal is determined by the finding which I have already recorded. In my opinion, however, my decision on the question of limitation involves a finding against the plaintiff on the question of jurisdiction also. If the Article to which I have referred, No. 29 of the First Schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, really covers the present case, then the suit now before me is essentially one for which provision is made within the four corners of the Tenancy Act itself. I have no doubt that the Legislature intended Chapter IX of the Tenancy Act, sections 119 to 149 inclusive, to deal exhaustively with all disputes which could possibly arise by reason of the exercise of the power of distraint, by any person claiming to be a landholder against any person whom he alleged to be his tenant and from whom he alleged an arrears of rent to be due. I have no doubt that the framers of the Tenancy Act did not contemplate the entertainment by any Court other than a Revenue Court of a suit like the present, which is in substance a suit for compensation for wrongful distraint. Courts other than Revenue Courts are debarred from taking cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which a suit or application under the Tenancy Act itself could have been made. Now, it is not denied, and cannot be denied for a moment, that section 142 of the Tenancy Act provides a remedy for any person whose crops have been distrained upon by any person claiming to be his landholder and entitled to an arrear of rent, if the owner of the said crops, either denies the title of the distrainer or denies that the arrear of rent in respect of which the distraint has been effected is actually due. On each of the three occasions which are alleged to have given Ram Nath his cause of action for the present suit, his crops had been distrained upon by a person whose title as landholder he denied, and on account of an alleged arrear of rent for which Ram Nath said that he was in no way liable. The case as put to me in argument on behalf of Ram Nath is not that he could not have instituted a suit to contest each one of these distraints, but that he could not have done so with any hope of success, so long as the District Judge's decision of the 18th of July 1916 remained in force and the error committed by the District Judge had not been set right by this Court in second appeal. I am afraid there is no question, in the provisions of the law which I am bound to administer, as to the hopes of success or certainty of failure with which suits to contest a distraint might or might not have been instituted. The question I have to consider is whether, on the state of facts and of law which Ram Nath has all along asserted, and which he has successfully asserted on final appeal to this Court, it was or was not open to him to contest each of these distraints by a suit brought under section 142 of the Local Tenancy Act. There is even something to be said against the argument that such suits were certain to fail. After all, in the original suit for arrears of rent the decision of the Trial Court, presumably the Court of the Assistant Collector, had been in his favour. He could have pointed out that an appeal was pending against the decision of the District Judge, which, therefore, could not have the effect of res judicata, and he might have asked for a fair re-consideration of his case on the merits. In the worst event, he could have asked the Court to release his crops upon security, under the appropriate provisions of the Tenancy Act, and to postpone the further hearing of the suit brought to contest the distraint until the determination of the second appeal pending in this Court. I cannot help thinking, moreover, that if a suit had been filed to contest the first distraint, and even a short adjournment obtained from the Assistant Collector's Court, an attempt might have been made, with fair chances of success, to obtain from this Court a sepecial order expediting the hearing of the appeal against the decision of the District Judge.

For these reasons I am satisfied that this appeal must succeed. The defendant Man Singh has, in my opinion, an adequate answer in law to the claim now made upon him. There are no equities in his favour, and I do not propose to allow him any portion of his costs. As an honest man he ought to have refunded the money. He has taken refuge behind the Statute of Limitation and has taken advantage of the fact that the plaintiff has been badly advised in the means by which he has sought to enforce his right. My order, therefore, is, that I set aside the decrees of both the Courts below and dismiss the suit, leaving the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Decree set aside.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 475 OF 1922.
September 21, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Hallifax, A. J. C.

ABDUL AZIZ KHAN—APPELLANT

BHAIRODAN—RESPONDENT.

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), s. 203 (5) (8), scope of—Abadi site—Express or implied contract between proprietor and holder, effect of —Absence of express contract—Implied contract, presumption of—Wajib-ul-arz or custom, whether excepted.

Nothing in section 203 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act would affect the terms of an express as well as an implied contract between the proprietor and holder of an abadi site. [p. 927, col. 1.]

Where there is no express contract between the proprietor and the holder of an abadi site an implied contract has to be presumed from the existence of a custom. [p. 926, col. 1.]

Section 203 of the C. P. Land Revenue Act does not override the provisions of a wajib-ul-arz or any existing custom. [p. 926, col. 1.]

Section 203 (5) of the C. P. Land Revenue Act speaks only of the classes of persons who hold sites in the abadi and not of the capacity in which they hold them and still less of the capacity in which they originally acquired them. [p. 926, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, in Civil Appeal No. 45 of 1922.

Messrs. V. Bose and P. N. Rudra, for the Appellant.

Messrs. G. L. Subhedar and K. K. Gandhe, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this case is over the possession of a house and compound in the abadi of the town of Balaghat, which was formerly called Burha, between the malguzars and the transferee of a person who owned the house and held the land from the malguzars. The house and the right to occupy the land were sold to the plaintiffs on behalf of a temple of which they are trustees, on the 12th of January 1919 for Rs. 1,500 by Chhote Lal and the other grandsons of the original occupant Dhiklu Dhimar. The property is at present under attachment by an order passed under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

(2) Dhekl: Dhimar had a house on this site before the Settlement of 1865. He was not then a tenant of agricultural land in the village, but became one later, probably about 1880. It has been found that before he acquired a tenancy he supported himself by fishing and a petty retail grain business. It is very improbable that he lived in the village of Burha as it then was without also "ordinarily working therein as an agricultural labourer," but there is no advertence to this in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. At the Settlement of 1895-96 the whole abadi was recorded as Nazul or Milkiyat Sarkar, but this was later found to be a mistake and it was corrected at the Settlement of 1914-15, when the land was again recorded as abadi malguzari.

(3). It has been held in the lower Appellate Court that Dheklu originally got possession of the site as a non-agriculturist, and, therefore, even after he became a tenant he, as also his heirs after him, continued in possession as a non-agriculturist and not as one of the classes of persons mentioned in section 203 (i) of the Land Revenue Act, 1917, and further that a custom has been proved to exist whereby the holders of such abadi sites can transfer them without the permission of the malguzar.

(4). It is clear, and it is hardly denied, that both decisions are wrong. Except in the fifth, sixth and seventh of its nine sub-sections, section 203 of the Land Revenue Act, 1917, merely states the existing law; it makes no change in it. It was suggested that it overrode the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz or any existing established custom. Sub-section (8), however, prevents that as, in any case, where there was no express contract, an implied contract would undoubtedly have to be presumed from the existence of the custom.

(5) There is, however, no evidence whatever in this case on which the finding of the existence of the custom could legally be based. Most of the instances are cases occurring between 1895 and 1915, when the land was wrongly supposed not to belong to the malguzar at all. Not one of the few others goes back beyond 1880, and in most of them the malguzar is stated to have given; his consent it is said that he went about with the Deputy Commissioner asking people to take up sites and build houses on them and charged them nothing. In no case prior to 1895 is anything more than acquiescence even alleged.

(6) The finding that the transferors held the site in 1919 not as tenants of agricultural land in the village, but as non-agriculturists because their grandfather had originally acquired it in that capacity and had ceased to be a non-agriculturist only forty years before is manifestly impossible. The question arises only because the Financial Commissioner has, since the decision of the appeal in the District Judge's Court, issued notifications in respect of this abadi under sub-sections (5) and (6) of section 203 which have retrospective effect. (No. 2228 and No. 1354 of 29th August 1922).

(7) Now, even if Dheklu was not an agricultural labourer in addition to being a fisherman and petty grain seller, and even if it could be supposed that after he became a tenant of agricultural land the implied contract between him and the malguzar by which he held the site of the house was not altered into a new one to the effect that he was to hold the land on the same terms as other tenants, it is to be observed that sub-section (5) of section 203 speaks only of the classes of persons who hold sites in the abadi, not of the capacity in which they hold them and still less of the capacity in which they originally acquired them. It is beyond doubt that in 1919 the plaintiff's transferors were included in the classes specified in sub-section (1) of section 203, so that they did not acquire any right to transfer it by virtue of the notification issued under sub-section (5). The malguzars are, therefore, entitled to resume possession of the site and the suit of the transferees for a declaration that they were entitled to have possession of it ought to have been dismissed.

(8). It has been suggested that now that a declaration has been made under sub-section (5) of section 203, sub-section (7) entitles every holder of a site in the abadi to transfer it on payment of nazrana, whether he is in one class of holders or the other. The wording of sub-section (7) can hardly be called happy, as sub-section (5) applies to every abadi though a notification under it is issued only in regard to some. The real meaning of that particular phrase is, however, clear but not the real meaning of the whole sub-section. From the words it seems equally possible to hold that the transfers mentioned in it are transfers by anybody in a village in respect of which a declaration has been made under sub-section (5) or that they are transfers only by the persons of the class mentioned in sub-section (5), that is, other than those specified in sub-section (1). An excursion into the dangerous ground of the probable intentions of the Legislature takes us little further.

(9). But the question does not really arise. Sub-section (8) enacts that nothing in the section is to affect the terms of any contract between the proprietor and the holder of a site in any abadi. This necessarily refers to implied as well as express contracts and it has already been said that Dheklu and his heirs made by implication a contract with the malguzar that they were to hold the site on the same terms as those on which all other tenants in the village held theirs. Those terms are too well known to require further statement. The appeal must, therefore, succeed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside. In lieu thereof a decree will issue dismissing the plaintiff's suit and ordering that they shall all bear the costs of both parties in all three Courts.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 15—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182—Award filed in Court—Execution of award—Limitation—Article applicable.

When an award becomes enforceable as if it were a decree of Court under section 15 of the Arbitration Act, all the actions of the successful party in enforcing his rights under the award become amenable to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act which govern the execution of decrees.

An application for execution of such an award is, therefore, governed by Art. 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 15th May 1922, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 18th January 1922.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, for Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal two points were raised, but only one has been argued and this is, whether the application for execution is within time or not. An award under Act IX of 1889 was duly filed in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind in the year 1911, and under section 15 became enforceable as if it were a decree of the Court.

The present application is dated the 16th November 1921 and it is not denied that it is within time if Art. 182 applies, that is to say, if there have been steps in execution in the interval, and three years had not elapsed from the date of the last step-in-aid of execution. Counsel contends that the limitation is governed by Art. 181 as, although the award is enforceable as if it were a decree, it is not a decree. He quotes the Bombay ruling Gajjar v. Lalubhai (1) to the effect that no appeal can be lodged from such an award and contends that the words "enforceable as if it were a decree" do not cover and include the right to make an application in execution periodically until twelve years have elapsed. There is, in my opinion, no force in this contention. The fact that the award is enforceable as a decree of Court makes all the actions of the successful party in enforcing his rights under the award amenable to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, and the Limitation Act which govern the execution of decrees.

The application is clearly within time, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, Art. 35—Suit to recover value of silver misappropriated by defendant, whether cognisable by Small Cause Court.

Plaintiff sued to recover from defendant a certain sum with interes. being the value of some silver made over by him to the defendant for conversion into ornaments and misappropriated by the latter. Plaintiff had prosecuted the defendant under section 406 of the Penal Code and had obtained a conviction, which had, however, been set aside on appeal:

Held, that the suit fell within the scope of Art. 35 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, and was not cognisable by a Small Cause Court.

Petition, under section 25 of Act IX of 1887, for revision of the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Sonepat, District Rohtak, dated the 8th January 1923.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 60-9-9 with interest being the value of certain silver made over by him to the defendant for conversion into ornaments and misappropriated by the latter. It appears that plaintiff brought a criminal case under section 406, Indian Penal Code, and obtained a conviction in the Trial Court which was set aside on appeal. The present suit was tried as a Small Cause Court case and was dismissed with costs.

It is urged on revision that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit in view of the provisions of Art. 35 clause (ii) of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The defendant is not represented but I have little hesitation in holding that this objection must be sustained. The clause in question was added by the amending Act of 1914 and appears to be fully applicable to the present case even though the claim was restricted to the value of the silver and did not include any prayer for damages. Cherakuddin v. Ram Siraman (1). Nabi Bakhsh v. Muhammad Ali (2) and Sughra v. Ram Lal Misra (3) are analogous cases and all these authorities support the petitioner.

I hold, therefore, that the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to hear the case. The order passed is ultra vires and must consequently be set aside and the claim tried in a Court of competent jurisdiction. The application is accepted, but in the circumstances I make no order as to costs.

Vendor and purchaser—Principal and agent—Property in possession of seller or agent—Delay in taking delivery—Seller or agent's power to sell—Notice to purchaser or principal—Contract Act IX of 1872), s. 107—Appeal, second—Finding not based on any evidence, whether binding.

Plaintiffs who carried on business at P. as commission agents, purchased certain goods from the defendants, who carried on business at S. As the defendants did not want immediate delivery, the goods remained in the plaintiffs' godowns for about 6 months when the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants asking for instructions as to the despatch of the goods, saying that if they did not receive a reply immediately they would despatch the goods to S. The defendants who up to that time had not received the account for the goods wrote back a letter the material part of which was as follows:—

"I wrote you to get the account adjusted. I will send all the dues on hearing from you. What you write now is not acceptable to me. O, brother, no fall in the market is yet in sight within 5 or 7 days. It is not proper to bring one under clutches in this way. I am ready to give you damages nor do I propose to cause loss to you. If I would have got the goods here, I would not have suffered loss. Considering this you will get the account adjusted."

At the time of this letter the market price of the goods in question at all events at P had fallen below the prices current at the date of purchase. About a fortnight after the receipt of the defendants' letter the plaintiffs without any intimation to the defendants sold the goods at P. and brought a suit to recover the difference between the sum realized and the purchase price :—

Held, (1) that if the plaintiffs were to be regarded as sellers they were governed by section 107 of the Contract Act and were not entitled to sell the goods without giving notice that unless the defendants took delivery they would sell the goods for what they would fetch ; [p. 930, col. 1.]

(2) that if the plaintiffs were to be regarded as the agents of the defendants their business was to hold the goods at the disposal of their principals and unless they had express authority to sell them, they were not entitled to sell them without either requesting payment or asking the defendants to take delivery and giving notice that in the event of their failure to do so they would sell the goods for their account; [p. 930, col. 1.]

(3) that there was nothing in the letter of the defendants which could possibly be interpreted as an authority to the plaintiffs to sell. The letter really appealed to the generosity of the plaintiffs not to enforce their right of despatching the goods immediately, but to wait and possibly to wait a little longer for payment and the mere fact that the defendants said that they were willing to bear the loss or suffer any damage that may arise could not mean anything more than that the loss was theirs and did not really concern the plaintiffs; [p. 931, col. 1.]

(4) that, therefore, the plaintiffs could not recover anything from the defendants and that their suit must fail. [p. 931, col. 1.]

Although the findings of fact of a first Appellate Court are not open to question in second appeal it is always open to the second Appellate Court to consider whether there is in fact any evidence to support the findings. [p. 930, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The plaintiffs, who carry on business at Patna as commission agents, purchased in 1916 certain goods for the defendants, who carry on business at Srimangal. In due course the plaintiffs rendered an account for the unpaid balance of their charges amounting, together with interest, to Rs. 839-9-9. The defendants challenged the propriety of one item in the account of amounting to Rs. 383-2-6 being Rs. 867-8-9, the purchase price of chillies paid for the defendants after crediting them with Rs. 484-6-3 the proceeds of the sale of the same. The chillies were purchased in May 1916 for the defendants' account but as the defendants apparently did not want immediate delivery, the goods remained in the plaintiffs' godown until November. On November 26th the plaintiffs wrote to the defendants asking for instructions as to the despatch of the chillies saying: "I wrote to you to have the same despatched but you do not write to me about the despatch. Please write immediately on receipt of this letter. Otherwise I would despatch them to Srimangal. You should at once send hundi and things without delay" On the 30th November, in reply, the defendants, who up to that time had not received the account for the goods, wrote a letter the material part of which was as follows:—"On the day I returned back I wrote you to get the account adjusted. I will send all the dues on hearing from you. What you write now is not acceptable to me. O brother no fall in the market is yet in sight within five or seven days. It is not proper to bring one under clutches in this way. You ought not to have written such a letter to me and expressed your mind. I am ready to give you damages nor do I propose to cause loss to you. You did not get anything from a certain person and you could not do anything. I am ready to pay you damages and still you are hostile to me. If I would have got the chillies here I would not have suffered loss. Considering this you will get the account adjusted." There can be no doubt that at that time the market-value of chillies, at all events in Patna, had fallen below the prices current at the date of the purchase. The plaintiffs did not reply to this letter and it may be observed that in the letter of the 26th November which they had written they had stated that if they did not receive an immediate reply to their letter they would despatch the chillies to Srimangal. About a fortnight after the defendant's letter was received, the plaintiffs without giving any intimation sold the chillies for a sum of Rs. 484-6-3 and they claim that they are entitled to the difference between the sum so realised and the purchase price. The plaintiffs were the defendants' agents and clearly to my mind had no authority to sell without instructions. They would have been entitled to despatch the goods or if the defendants failed to take delivery they would have been within their rights in selling the goods after giving notice that they would do so if delivery was refused but no such notice was given. Whether one regards them as sellers or whether one regards them as agents it seems to me that the plaintiffs had no authority to sell the goods without instructions from the defendants or without giving notice that unless the defendants took delivery they would sell the goods for what they would fetch. If they are to be regarded as sellers then, clearly, they are governed by section 107 of the Indian Contract Act which provides that "where the buyer of goods fails to perform his part of the contract, either by not taking the goods sold to him, or by not paying for them, the seller, having a lien on the goods, or having stopped them in transit, may, after giving notice to the buyer of his intention to do so, re-sell them, after the lapse of a reasonable time, and the buyer must bear any loss, but is not entitled to any profit which may occur on such re-sale." It is quite clear, I think, from the facts of this case that the defendants did not refuse to take delivery of the goods. All that they were asking was that delivery should be held over a little longer and there is nothing at all in the evidence which has been suggested to us to point to the fact that they ever actually refused to take delivery of the goods.

If, on the other hand, the plaintiffs are to be regarded as agents it seems to me that their business was to hold the goods at the disposal of their principals and unless they had express authority to sell them they were not entitled to sell them without either requesting payment or asking the defendants to take delivery and giving notice that in the event of their failure to do so they would sell the goods for their account. On the first January the defendants telegraphed to the plaintiff to deliver the chillies to them at Srimangal but by that time they had already been sold by the plaintiffs as stated. The plaintiffs contended that the letter of the 30th November was an authority to them to sell and that they were justified in the circumstances in so doing. It is not suggested that any other authority beyond the letter in question was given to them.

The Trial Court considered that the letter did not give any authority to the plaintiffs to sell the chillies and disallowed this part of the plaintiff's claim giving them a decree with costs for the balance.

The Subordinate Judge on appeal took a different view. He considered that the defendants having intimated that they were prepared to be debited with any loss justified the plaintiffs in disposing of the goods.

On second appeal by the defendants to this Court the case came before a Single Judge who considered that he was not entitled to question the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court or to consider whether the document relied upon by the Subordinate Judge was properly interpreted by him. He accordingly dismissed the appeal.

From that decision the present appeal has been preferred by the defendants under the Letters Patent. Although the findings of fact of the first Appellate Court are not open to question in second appeal it is always open to the second Appellate Court to consider whether there is in fact any evidence to support the findings. In the present case the only evidence adduced in support of the findings is the letter of the 30th November. That letter, as well as the plaintiffs' letter of the 26th November, to which it is a reply have been placed before us and it is contended that they afford no evidence to support the findings of the Subordinate Judge. The learned Judge of this Court in second appeal declined to consider the case from this point of view. With great respect, I think he ought to have done so and determined for himself, not whether the lower Appellate Court's view of the evidence was right or wrong but, whether there was any evidence which supported his finding. We have considered the letter of the 30th November which is the only evidence put forward in support of that finding and indeed the only evidence upon which the finding was based and it seems to me that it is impossible to read into it any authority to the plaintiffs to sell the chillies. I have already set out the material parts of the letter and it is not necessary to refer to it again, but I think it is quite impossible to find throughout that letter anything which would possibly be interpreted as an authority to the plaintiffs to sell. It appears to be the letter of a person who was appealing rather to the generosity of the plaintiffs not to enforce their rights of despatching the goods immediately but to wait, and possibly to wait a little longer for payment, and the mere fact that they say that they are quite willing to bear the loss or suffer any damage that may arise cannot mean more than that the loss was theirs and does not really concern the plaintiffs. In these circumstances, it seems to me that there was no authority given in that letter at all to sell and, therefore, that being the case, there was no evidence at all in this case which would support the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge.

It was contended that section 53 of the Contract Act was applicable to this case and that under that section the plaintiffs had in fact been prevented from performing their part of the agreement and that they were, therefore, entitled to avoid the contract and to sue the defendant for any damages which they might suffer. From first to last, throughout this case there is nothing to show that the plaintiffs ever purported to rescind the contract. Their duty was to hold the goods for the disposal of the defendants and if they intended not to hold them any longer then, obviously, to my mind their plain duty was to intimate to the defendants that unless they took immediate delivery they would dispose of the goods by sale and recoup themselves for their loss. Had they done so, clearly, they would have been entitled to ask the defendants to pay the balance between the price fetched and the price paid for the goods originally, but not having done so it seems to me they acted without authority and they cannot, in the circumstances, having failed to deliver the goods, ask the defendants to pay the cost. In my opinion this appeal should be allowed the decision of this Court and of the Subordinate Judge should be set aside and the decision of the Trial Court restored. The defendants are entitled to their costs throughout except the costs in the Trial Court which will be paid by them as directed by the Munsif.

A person mortgaged his property by way of conditional sale. Later on, he borrowed some more money from his mortgagee and executed a deed which recited the earlier mortgage by conditional sale and stated that a further loan was taken from the mortgagee which was to be included in the money due on the earlier mortgage and re-paid with it. It also contained a covenant that, until the money due on the latter deed was paid, the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem the mortgage by conditional sale or to transfer any portion of the mortgaged property. The deed was described as a deed of further charge (dastawez t massuk mashrat-ul-rehan):

A Court may presume the genuineness of a document more than 30 years old, which was executed before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, and which was properly registered by the executant, even if it is not signed by the executant personally nor bears his mark. [p. 932, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 5th of January 1922.

Mr. H. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage by conditional sale effected by Ram Dayal Singh and others in favour of Sukhai Singh and Gopal Singh on the 12th of January 1862. The suit was resisted by the defendant No. 1 who claimed in addition the money due on what he described as two other deeds of further charge. One of them was disallowed by the Court of first instance but allowed by the lower Appellate Court, and it forms the subject-matter of the present appeal. The latter deed recited the earlier mortgage by conditional sale and stated that a further loan of Rs. 400 was taken from the mortgagees, which was to be included in the money due on the earlier mortgage and re-paid with it. It also contained a covenant that until the money due on the latter deed was paid, the mortgagors could not be entitled to redeem the mortgage by conditional sale or to transfer any portion of the mortgaged property elsewhere, the deed was described as a deed of further charge (dastawez tamassuk mashrat-ul-rehan). The language of the document, taken as a whole, clearly shows that the parties intended that the money due on the subsequent transaction, represented by the above deed of further charge, was to be consolidated with that due on the earlier mortgage by conditional sale, and that the said mortgage by conditional sale was not to be redeemed till the money due on the deed of further charge was paid. In fact, the mortgagors had agreed not to transfer the property elsewhere till the money due on the deed of further charge was re-paid. The terms of the documents correspond very nearly with the terms of the documents which formed the subject of consideration in Ranjit Khan v. Ramdhan Singh (1) and Har Pershad v. Ram Chander (2). The learned Counsel for the appellants has referred to the decisions in Baldeo Rai v. Murli Rai (3) and Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (4). But the terms of the documents considered in those cases were in no sense identical with those which form the subject of consideration in the present appeal. In the former case there was no indication afforded by the deed of the creation of any further charge and all that it provided was that the money due on the later transaction was to be paid first, that is to say, before that due on the earlier deed was paid. In the latter case the contract of consolidation was not explicit as in the present instance, and the document was not described as a deed of further charge.

It is also urged that the lower Appellate Court was not justified in presuming the genuineness of the deed of further charge in question inasmuch as the deed did not purport to have been signed by the executants personally or to bear their marks. The deed was, however, executed on the 12th of January 1862 before the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 had come into force, and it was usual at that time that the signatures of the executants and all such attesting witnesses, as were illiterate were made by the scribe at their instance or request and they were treated as signatures made by an authorised agent and as effectual as the signatures or marks of the executants themselves. The document was duly registered by the executants and over thirty years old; and there is no reason to think that it was otherwise than genuine. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Berar Inam Rules of 1859—Deshpandia allowance, whether inam—Succession—"Direct lineal heirs" in r. 5, meaning of.

Deshapande allowance in Berar is an inam and is governed by the Berar Inam Rules of 1859. The inam falls under class (4) (first) and is dealt with by r. 6 of the Rules. [p. 933, col. 2; p. 934, col. 1.]

The words "direct lineal heirs" in r. 5 of the Berar Inam Rules refer to the heirs of the person mentioned just before in the same clause, that is, the first grantee under the British rule and not to any future incumbent who has not been mentioned anywhere in the clause. [p. 934, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 13th October 1920, in Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1920.

Mr. G. G. Hatvalne, for the Appellants.
Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of a share of a Deshpande allowance which is paid by the Government to the defendant Ganesh as the respresentative of the family of Watandar Deshpandias of Morsi Pergana. Admittedly, the allowance was divisible amongst four branches of the family. These branches and the relationship of the parties are shown in the following genealogical table:—

Defendant Ganesh, Hanmantrao and Pralhad represented three branches and the five sons of Kaloji the fourth. Hanmantrao died in 1918 and the plaintiffs who are his sisters claimed to succeed to his share. They sued for the share of the allowance for the year preceding and the year succeeding Hanmantrao's death. The defendant's pleading is not very clear but it appears to amount to this, that the allowance being a grant to the Deshpande family the plaintiffs who had by marriage ceased to belong to the family had no right to share in it in succession to Hanmantrao. I do not refer to the other pleas which are now not material. The Trial Court had framed the following two issues on the above pleas:—

"1. Whether the Watan in suit can go to plaintiffs by succession or not?
2. Have plaintiffs no cause of action for the Lawajma of 1918-19?"

The Trial Court holding that according to the Bombay School of Hindu Law the sister is recognised as a Gotraja Sapinda and an heir and that succession to the allowance was governed by the ordinary Hindu Law decreed the plaintiffs' claim. The lower Appellate Court held that the allowance was governed by rule VI of the Inam Rules, and that under that rule the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed since they were not direct lineal heirs of the last holder Hanmantrao. This decision is the result of its holding that the lineal heirs referred to in that rule are the lineal heirs of the last holder and not of the first granted under British rule. The plaintiffs appeal.

The first question to be decided is, whether Deshpande allowance is an inam and governed by the Berar Inam Rules of 1859. This question has been very fully dealt with by the Financial Commissioner in ruling No. 1 in section VI, serial No. 4 of the Berar Revenue Manual, Volume II, page 277. I agree with the Financial Commissioner's decision and his reasons therefor, which need not be repeated here. I am referred to section V, serial No. 4, paragraph 3, which says:—

"It is to be noted that the directions concerning the emoluments of Deshmukhs and Deshpandias in the Inam Rule 6 (2) refer only to "Inams" by which the Inams Rules mean land grants. The restrictions on the succession to Deshmukh and Deshpandia Inams contained in Inam Rule VI, read with Inam Rule V, do not, therefore, apply to the succession to these cash rusums, the succession to which is regulated by the personal law of the Watan family. * * *"

This statement is only a part of executive instructions and interprets the law in a particular manner but has not the force of law like the Inam Rules. No reasons are given in support of the interpretation and it ignores the previous ruling of the Financial Commissioner. I hold that the allowance is an Inam and governed by the Inam Rules.

The next question is, whether the plaintiffs are entitled to the allowance after Hanumantrao's death. The Inam falls under class 4 (first) and is dealt with by rule 6. Rule VI (2) lays down that it shall be disposed of according to clause 2 of rule V. The part now material of rule V is as follows:—

"If the present incumbent is a descendant of the original grantee, the inam will be continued to him hereditarily, subject to the following conditions:— first, successions limited to direct lineal heirs and undivided brothers."

The question is, which is the person whose direct lineal heir are referred to in the first sub-clause? Whether the first grantee under the British rule. The words "direct lineal heirs" must be taken to refer to the heir of the person mentioned just before in the same clause and that is the present incumbent or the incumbent when the rules were made to whom the Inam is directed to be continued hereditarily The expression cannot be held to refer to any future incumbent who has not been mentioned anywhere in the clause. The objection urged against this interpretation is that if the first grantee under the British rule dies without lineal heirs and is succeeded by his undivided brother, when the latter dies his lineal heirs would not succeed because they are not the lineal heirs of the first grantee. It is said that this could not have been contemplated. There is no grave reason why this could not have been contemplated; but the fact that the obvious interpretation of the language of the rule leads to a result which seems somewhat anomalous does not justify a different and less obvious interpretation. It is also to be noted, as remarked by the Financial Commissioner in ruling No. 2 in section VI, serial No. 3, that unless the expression "direct lineal heirs" refers to the heirs of the first grantee under British rule the expression "undivided brothers" would be meaningless. I am of opinion that the lineal heirs referred to in rule V clause 2 (first) are the lineal heirs of the first grantee under British rule.

Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed to the inam depends on the question whether they are the direct lineal heirs of such a grantee. In the first Court the trial proceeded on the assumption that succession to the allowance was governed by the ordinary Hindu Law and it was, therefore, not ascertained who was the first grantee under British rule, and there is nothing on the record to show who such grantee was. I, therefore, remand the case to the lower Appellate Court for findings as to who was the first grantee of the allowance from the British Government and as to whether the plaintiffs are his lineal heirs. The lower Appellate Court will take further pleadings and allow evidence to be given either before itself or in the Trial Court. The findings will be remitted to this Court as early as may be.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 123, applicability of—Suit against co-legatee for share of estate—Limitation.

GURBAKHSH SINGH v. BHAGWAN SINGH.

A suit by a legatee to recover a share of the estate of the deceased bequeated to him from a co-legatee who is in possession of that share is governed by Art. 123 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. [p. 936, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 4th June 1920, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 13th February 1920.

Mr. Sagar Chand and Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One Hazura Singh died in 1910 leaving four sons. He is said to have disinherited two by a Will and to have left to the remaining two the whole of his property, which he asserted in the document to be self-acquired. The two legatees lived at peace with each other until recently and now, in the year 1919, Gurbakhsh Singh brings a suit against his elder brother Bhagwan Singh for his share in the estate, which he says Bhagwan Singh has appropriated in its entirety. It has been held by both the lower Courts that the suit is barred by limitation, that Art. 123 does not apply, and that under Art. 120 also the suit is barred. On second appeal it is contended that, even if Art. 120 applies, six years have not elapsed since a demand was made by the plaintiff and, therefore, the suit is within time and further that Art. 123 does apply and govern the case. So far as Art. 120 is concerned, the plaint does not disclose the date of any demand but merely states vaguely that a demand was made. Counsel for the appellant contends that, under these circumstances, it is for the defendant to prove the negative that no demand was made within six years and that it is unnecessary for him in his plaint even to state that he has a cause of action within limitation. For this view he can adduce no authority and we find that, as the plaint does not disclose a demand within six years, even if Art. 120 did govern the case the suit would be clearly barred by time.

As to Art. 123, the real question is the applicability of Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (1) and whether the view taken by the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in XLIII Madras Law Journal Zemindar of Bhadrachalam & Palavancha v. Venkatadri Appa Rao (2)] more especially at page 500* is to prevail as against many previous rulings. Article 123 says that a suit for a legacy or for a share of a residue bequeathed by a testator may be brought within 12 years and it has been held hitherto that the suit must be against a person who lawfully represents the estate of the deceased and that it does not govern a case against an executor de son tort. The Privy Council ruling Maung Tun Tha v. Ma Thit (1) doubtless dealt with a case in which the parties were Buddhists and a question of Buddhist custom was involved. It is quite clear, however, that the suit was against an executor de son tort and their Lordships observed at page 387† that proof of the custom having failed the plaintiff was entitled to bring his suit to assert "a right which he was at liberty to assert within any period that was not outside the period fixed by Art. 123 of the Indian Limitation Act as the period within which a claim must be made for a share of property on the death of an intestate." The fact that in the present case there was a Will does not affect the position, for the Article applies equally to the case of an intestate's estate and to one in which the deceased has left a Will. Counsel contends that where two men are nominated as beneficiaries under a Will they are not legatees and the estate conferred upon them is not a legacy, but he cannot explain what they are if not legatees. Before the Madras High Court the question was argued at considerable length and it was held that Art. 123 applies to suits for legacies against any person rightly or wrongly in possession of the estate under such circumstances that he is bound to deal with it as the estate of the deceased and that it, therefore, applies to suits for legacies against an executor de son tort. Here the defendant was certainly entitled under the Will to a portion of the estate, but he is nonetheless an executor de son tort and, as explained by the Chief Justice of Madras, at page 500* of the ruling, "an executor de son tort takes all the liabilities of an executor, and it would be a curious thing if claims to legacies against an executor were not barred until the lapse of 12 years but claims against executors de son tort were barred in a shorter period. That this Article applies to persons other than the executors in possession of an estate has been decided in several cases." The Privy Council ruling is then referred to and it is explained that what was there decided was that Art. 123 applies to a claim to a share of an estate against co-heirs in possession. We accept this view as obviously correct and indeed we are unable to understand how the Privy Council ruling admits of any other interpretation. We find that the suit was instituted within time. We accept the appeal and remand the case for decision on the merits. Costs will follow the event.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 284 OF 1922.

SHAMS-UD-DIN KHAN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Agha Siyid FATEH SHAH—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 99, O. I, r. 10—Suit instituted in name of wrong plaintiff—Mistake, how rectified—Evidence Act (I 1872), s. 116—Rent suit—Question of lessor's title, whether relevant—Ostensible lessee merely trustee—Title of lessor, whether can be questioned—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106—Contract to contrary, whether valid—Nazul land, lease of—Rules of Government, rule 1820, interpretation of.

Where a plaint purports to be filed by a Municipal Board with the addition of the name of the Chairman as plaintiff, the error is not one of substance but merely of form and may be corrected under the provisions of O. I, r. 10, Civil Procedure Code, if the objection is taken in the Trial Court. [p. 937, cols. 1 & 2.]

Under section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code, this defect cannot be made the ground of any interference with the decree passed by the Court. [p. 937, col. 2.]

In a suit between a lessor and lessee, the latter cannot be permitted to deny the title of the former. [p. 937, col. 2.]

The question of the lessor's title is foreign to a suit for rent or in ejectment against the lessee and this is equally true in a case where the ostensible lessee is merely a trustee and liable to render account to the cestui que trust. [p. 937, col. 2.]

Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh, 30 Ind. Cas. 290; 37 A. 557; 10 C. W. N. 1207; 29 M. L. J. 335; 2 L. W. 830; 18 M. L. T. 248; 13 A. L. J. 991; 17 Bom. L. R. 1006; 22 C. L. J. 516; (1915) M. W. N. 757; 42 I. A. 202 (P. C.), followed.

The terms of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act are 'subject to any contract to the contrary' and a notice of ejectment complying with the terms of the contract is valid though it may offend against the terms of the aforesaid section. [p. 938, col. 1.]

Rule 1820 of Rules of Government regarding management of Nazul property by Municipal Boards lays down that when a terminable lease is given it shall not ordinarily be for a period shorter than 30 years. The use of the word 'ordinarily' necessarily implies exceptions and it is discretionary with Municipal Boards to give a lease for a shorter period. [p. 938, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Third Additional District Judge, Sitapur, dated the 27th May 1922, upholding that of the Munsif, Sitapur, dated the 24th March 1922.

Mr. Ishri Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mahesh Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought against the defendant-appellant for possession of plot No. 1274, measuring 3 biswas 9 biswansis 6 kadhwansis situate within the Municipal limits of Sitapur. On the 22nd November 1904 the defendant-appellant's father, Fakhar-ud-din, took the land in suit on a lease from the Municipal Board of Sitapur. The contract between the parties in respect of this land leased is evidenced by an instrument dated the 22nd November 1904 executed by Fakharuddin in favour of the Municipal Board. The lessee was to put up a shop made of tiles (khaprel). The rent fixed was Rs. 24 a year payable on the first of every month with an instalment of Rs. 2. One of the conditions of the lease was that the Board shall have power to determine the lease by serving a notice of one month within which the lessee was to remove his materials and to vacate the land; in the event of the lessee not complying with the notice, the Municipal Board had a right to remove the construction themselves. It appears that the Municipal Board served a notice on the defendant on the 27th July 1921, asking him to remove his construction on the plot in suit and to vacate the land within one month from the date of the receipt of the notice. The defendant did not comply with the notice. The suit was consequently lodged as stated before. The Courts below have decreed the suit.

The first objection taken in this Court to the validity of the suit is, that it was not in a proper form. This objection is based on the ground that the Chairman of the Municipal Board of Sitapur appears as a plaintiff in the body of the plaint and is mentioned by his name. It is argued that, in virtue of the provisions of section 6 of the U. P. Municipal Act, 1916, the Municipal Board is a corporate body and as such it is vested with the capacity of suing and being sued in its corporate name and consequently the suit in the name of the Chairman of the Board was incompetent. The premises are correct but the conclusion drawn is not strictly accurate. It is true that the name of the gentleman, who happened to be the Chairman of the Board on the date of the institution of this suit, was mentioned in the heading of the plaint as the plaintiff but he was clearly described therein as the Chairman of the Municipal Board of Sitapur. There can be no doubt that the plaint was presented with the intention of showing that it was the Municipal Board which was suing. At the worst, it is a case where a suit has been instituted in the name of the wrong person as the plaintiff and the error could have been easily corrected under the provisions of r. 10 of O. I of the Code of Civil Procedure if the defendant-appellant had taken the objection in the Courts below which he has now urged as to the form of the suit. It is admitted that it is for the first time in this Court that this defect is being relied upon as justifying the dismissal of the suit altogether. I have already said, that the defect is not one of substance but merely of form.

Under section 99 of the Code of Civil Procedure this defect cannot be made the ground of any interference with the decrees which the Courts below have passed in this case.

It is next urged that the plot in suit being nazul property the title to it is vested in the Secretary of State for India in Council and, therefore, the Municipal Board has no title to bring this suit in ejectment. This contention must be overruled. This is a case between lessor and lessee where the lessee has refused to vacate the lease-hold property in spite of a proper notice to quit. The lessee cannot be permitted to deny the title of the lessor, in this case the Municipal Board of Sitapur. Under a certain Notification issued by the Government of the United Provinces this property has been entrusted to the management and control of the Municipal Board of Sitapur but that is a matter with which we are not concerned in this case. The question of the lessor's title is foreign to the suit for rent or in ejectment against the lessee and this is equally true in a case where the ostensible lessee is merely a trustee and liable to account to the cestui que trust. It is admitted that the defendant-appellant's father, through whom the appellant derives his title to the occupation of the plot in suit, was let into possession by the Municipal Board of Sitapur. It is also not denied that since he was so let into possesion the rent reserved by the lease has been paid by him to the Municipal Board. He received notice to quit but has never given up possession. On the other hand, his learned Pleader now denied the title of the lessor. In the circumstances, the principle of section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act applies. In the case of Bilas Kunwar v. Desraj Ranjit Singh (1) Sir George Farwell, in delivering the judgment of His Majesty's Privy Council, said:—"Section 116 of the Indian Evidence Act is perfectly clear on the point, and rests on the principle well-established by many English cases, that a tenant who has been let into possession cannot deny his landlord's title, however defective it may be, so long as he has not openly restored possession by surrender to his landlord." This contention must also be overruled.

It was further argued that, in view of rule 1820 of the Rules of the Government in relation to the management of the nazul property entrusted to the charge of the Municipal Board, there cannot be a lease in respect of such property for a period shorter than thirty years. The lease in question should, therefore, be construed to be for that period. This argument again has no substance whatsoever. The rule referred to only says that, when a terminable lease is given, it shall not ordinarily be for a shorter period than thirty years. The use of the word 'ordinarily' necessarily implies exceptions and in the case before me the Municipal Board in its discretion did not consider it proper to give a lease for a period longer than what is stated in the lease itself. The argument, therefore, fails.

Lastly, it was argued that, having regard to the terms of section 106 of the Transfer or Property Act, the notice to quit, which was served on the appellant on the 27th July 1921, was not a valid notice. But the terms of section 106 are subject to any contract to the contrary and in the case before me there is a contract to the contrary embodied in the instrument of the 22nd November 1904. The notice served on the appellant is quite within the terms of the contract and does not in any manner violate them. This argument also fails.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 41 (3)—Appeal, second—Question of custom—Application for certificate—Order directing grant of certificate—Certificate, separate, whether necessary—Custom v. personal law—Adoption—Uncle's daughter's son— Rai Brahmans of Mohra Bhattan, Tahsil and District Rawalpindi.

Where the order of a District Judge directing the grant of a certificate under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act, read with the application for the grant of the certificate, contains all the particulars required by the section, the omission to draw up a formal certificate is immaterial. [p. 939, col. 1.]

Rai Brahmans of Mauza Mohra Bhattan, Tahsil and District Rawalpindi, are governed by Hindu Law in matters of adoption, and the adoption of an uncle's daughter's son is recognised among them as valid. [p. 940, cols. 1 & 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 1st April 1921, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 30th July 1920.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for a declaration that they are the owners of the lands and houses left by their brother Sant Ram, who died in 1917. The defendant, who is Sant Ram's uncle's daughter's son, and also Sant Ram's wife's brother's son, claims title to the property on the ground that Sant Ram adopted him and made a Will in his favour. The suit has been dismissed, the Courts below having concurred in finding that the parties are governed by Hindu Law and that the adoption and the Will have been proved and are valid. The plaintiffs have preferred a second appeal, in which the main contention is that the parties are governed by custom.

BHASU RAM v. PIARA CHAND.

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondent that there is no proper certificate from the District Judge as required by section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. It is true that there is no certificate apart from the order of the District Judge granting one, but the appellants have filed a copy of that order which is in the following terms:—

"I have held that parties are bound by Hindu Law. Petitioner's contention is that they are bound by custom. The evidence is conflicting and difficult. The question affects a whole village and is thus important. I accordingly grant a certificate under section 41 of the Punjab Courts Act".

We think that this order itself amounts to a certificate and as, when read with the application on which it was passed, it is found to contain all the particulars required by section 41 of the Act we hold that the requirements of the section have been satisfied and we overrule the objection.

The property in suit is situate in the villages of Mohra Bhattan and Mangot in the Rawalpindi Tahsil of the Rawalpindi District. Sant Ram was a Rai Brahman or Bhat of Mohra Bhattan, and the village was named after the Bhats who inhabited it. The material facts are given in the following passage from the judgment of the learned District Judge:—

"Both the villages in question, Mohra Bhattan and Mangot, are populated in the main by Rai Brahmans. There are about 140 houses in both the villages and there are less than six houses belonging to other persons. There are two dhoks, however, in the village, Dhok Sayadan seems to contain two houses of Sayads and Dhok Hashu contains four houses of occupancy tenants. These Sayads are owners by purchase in the village. There are a few barbers, a Jhiwar, and a Sunar, whose presence there may only be temporary. Of both the villages the Lambardars are Brahmans. There is also evidence to show that there are only 40 to 50 ploughs in those villages though the families number 140. In spite of this, it would seem that numerous Brahmans do plough the land themselves, though there are some who use tenants. Further, there are 88 people out of the villages, who are in service in the Police, Army, etc. Then, there are others who are shop-keepers, Granthis, tonga drivers, and pony hirers, etc. It is also in evidence that some of the poorer numbers still take birt and perform priestly functions, though this has become less common than formerly. Even plaintiffs' own witness (P. W. No. 5) further admits that some still wear the sacred thread."

It is, as the learned District Judge observes, difficult to say whether the principal means of livelihood of the Rai Brahmans is agriculture or service, since so many are in outside employ and engaged in other occupations. The proprietary body is also no longer homogeneous, as persons of different tribes such as Sayads, Ghakhars, Khatris, Mohyals, etc., have become owners by purchase. Still the majority of the proprietors are Rai Brahmans, and the learned District Judge seems to be right in saying that they form a fairly compact village community and that their basic occupation is agriculture, and that thus the onus, which originally rested on the plaintiffs, is shifted to the defendant to prove that they are governed by Hindu Law. He has, however, held that the onus has been discharged by proof of the fact that there have been numerous uncontested alienations in the village as well as many adoptions, and by proof of certain instances in which daughters have succeeded to property in the presence of collaterals.

There have been 44 sales in the villlage, of which 21 were in favour of a Khatri and many others in favour of persons of various castes besides Brahmans, and 15 gifts. None of these alienations have been contested. The learned District Judge has mentioned a case in which Mr. Stephens decided in 1903 that the parties followed custom, but that case is not in point as it related to another village and the parties to it were Mahal Brahmans and not Rai Brahmans. There have also been many adoptions of sons or grandsons of daughters or sisters. One of these was contested by the plaintiff's family and the suit failed.

Besides the alienations, there are two instances mentioned by D. W. Nos. 7 and 18 in which daughters have succeeded in preference to collaterals. Only two instances to the contrary have been cited and both are capable of explanation. One Chet Ram was succeeded by his collaterals, but the land was very small in area and it was in mortgage with Gurdit Singh (D. W. No. 11) at the time of Chet Ram's death, so that the daughters may not have thought it worth while to claim it. Moreover, the mutation took place only in 1917, so that the succession may yet be contested. The other instance is that of the succession to the property left by one Bharo, and the explanation of her daughter not succeeding is given by the latter's husband D. W. No. 11, who says that there was only a small quantity of land and that the collaterals were his sister's sons.

None of the authorities cited before us appear to be on all fours with the present case. Devi Ditta Singh v. Dropti (1) on which Counsel for the appellants relies, does not help him, as no evidence was given in that case to rebut the presumption which it was held arose in favour of the parties following custom. In Daswandi v. Mahant Krishen Dev (2) although many alienations were shown to have taken place, only one of them was a permanent transfer to a non Brahman, and the power of alienation was restricted by the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz.

There is one case, not cited before us, which in some respects resembles the present one, namely, Lachman Das v. Pahla Mal (3) a case relating to Brahmans of Gopalpur in the Amritsar District. Those Brahmans formed, as in the present case, a compact village community and they followed agriculture, although they were not wholly dependent upon it and followed other professions also. But in a previous case a daughter's son had been allowed to succeed as it was found to be proved that daughters excluded collaterals, and as the evidence adduced in the case before the Chief Court did not lead to a different conclusion the findings of the lower Courts that the plaintiffs' family were governed by Hindu Law as regards alienation of ancestral property were affirmed.

We think that in the present case the learned District Judge is right in finding that the defendant has succeeded in discharging the onus of proving that Sant Ram was governed by Hindu Law.

As regards the validity of the defendant's adoption, although under the strict Hindu Law the adoption of a person standing to his adoptive father in the relation in which the defendant stood to Sant Ram would not be permissible, it must be borne in mind that that law is in practice often modified by custom, and we find in the present case sufficient evidence that it has been so modified in respect of adoptions, sisters and daughter's sons and grandsons having, as already remarked, been adopted in several instances and no such adoptions having ever been declared invalid.

The appeal consequently fails and we dismiss it with costs.

GURMUKH SINGH—PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Vendor and purchaser—Privity of contract—Money left in hands of purchaser for payment to mortgagee, whether attachable as belonging to latter.

One Harnam Singh mortgaged a house to Hira Singh for Rs. 700 and subsequently sold the house to one G; out of the sale price Rs. 700 were left with G for payment to Hira Singh. G then sold the house to defendant, and again out of the sale price a sum was left with the defendant for payment to Hira Singh. The latter realised the mortgage-money direct from Harnam Singh. Subsequently, he obtained a money-decree against Harnam Singh and in execution of that decree brought to sale the sum left in deposit with the defendant for payment to himself. The deposit was purchased by plaintiff who now sued to recover the amount:

Held (1) that Harnam Singh having paid off Hira Singh could claim to step into his shoes;

(2) but that Hira Singh not having been a party to the contract between G and the defendant could not enforce that contract and consequently there was no sum in the hands of the defendant attachable as belonging to Hira Singh or Harnam Singh, and the plaintiff's suit was, therefore, liable to be dismissed

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 15th May 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Amritsar, dated the 23rd December 1921.

Mr. K. J. Rustomji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are as follows:—

Harnam Singh mortgaged, on a date unknown, a house to Hira Singh for Rs. 700.

On 12th March 1917 Harnam Singh sold the same house to Ghulam Jilani for Rs. 1,700 and Rs. 700 were retained by Ghulam Jilani for payment to the mortgagee Hira Singh.

On 24th November 1919 Ghulam Jilani sold the house to Musammat Chet Kaur for Rs. 2,700. The sale-deed recited that Hira Singh had a charge on the house and that Rs. 1,000 were left in deposit with the vendee for payment to Hira Singh or his legal representative. Harnam Singh's name is not mentioned.

On 13th April 1918 Hira Singh sued Harnam Singh on a bond and got a decree on 7th May 1918 for Rs. 115 and costs.

Before suing out execution of this decree Hira Singh, according to his own statement in the present suit, realised from Harnam Singh the mortgage charge of Rs. 700 on the house above-mentioned by bringing to sale another house. The truth of this statement is not challenged in the appeal before me which is to be described presently.

In his application for execution of his decree for Rs. 115 against Harnam Singh Hira Singh stated that a sum of Rs. 700 belonging to Harnam Singh was in the hands of Musammat Chet Kaur and he asked for this to be attached. It was attached accordingly and was brought to auction-sale. At the sale an objection was notified by Musammat Chet Kaur that she held no sum of Rs. 700 belonging to Harnam Singh. The money attached was purchased by Gurmukh Singh for Rs. 230.

Gurmukh Singh then instituted the suit from which the present second appeal has arisen against Musammat Chet Kaur for recovery of Rs. 700. Hira Singh and Harnam Singh were joined as defendants. The cause of action was his auction-purchase.

The Trial Court dismissed the suit, holding that, in the circumstances described above, Musammat Chet Kaur was not in possession of any money belonging to Harnam Singh with whom she had no contract. On appeal by Gurmukh Singh the District Judge gave him a decree for Rs. 700 "the amount lying in deposit with Musammat Chet Kaur." The learned District Judge apparently accepted as true the statement above described of Hira Singh and his declaration that he had no claim on the Rs. 700 lying with Musammat Chet Kaur and held that, in those circumstances, Gurmukh Singh, the auction-purchaser in execution proceedings, could recover from Musammat Chet Kaur.

The latter has preferred a second appeal. Her real grievance seems to be that she cannot get possession of the house, which, according to the evidence in suit, has remained in the possession of Hira Singh as mortgagor and which Hira Singh says has been handed back by him to Harnam Singh. Apparently, she would be quite willing to pay the money if she could get the house. Her answer to the suit, however, that she possessed no money recoverable from her by Harnam Singh is effective.

The argument that Harnam Singh stepped into the shoes of Hira Singh as holder of the charge on the house mentioned in the sale-deed of Ghulam Jilani to Musammat Chet Kaur is not contested. It is conceded that, having paid off Hira Singh, he may claim to have done so. But it is pointed out for the appellant that Hira Singh was not a party to the contract between Ghulam Jilani and Musammat Chet Kaur and could not intervene in it or bring a suit upon it. This contention is correct and is supported by a number of authorities, e. g., Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (1), Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (2); Mangal Sen v. Muhammad Hussain (3) Mannath Veettil Itti Panku Menon v. Dharman Achan (4) and Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (5),

The last named case distinguishes and explains Deb Narain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (6) relied upon by the other side which is also distinguished in a later judgment of the same Court Kherode Behari v. Raja Narendra Lal Khan (7) and is clearly distinguishable on its facts from the present case. This being so, Musammat Chet Kaur held no money attachable as belonging to Harnam Singh or as being property over which he had a disposing power exercisable for his own benefit.

I accept the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the order of the Trial Court dismissing the suit, with costs throughout.

Mortgage—Prior and subsequent mortgages—Decree on subsequent mortgage—Sale in execution—Auction-purchaser, whether entitled to recover possession—Prior mortgagee, rights of.

One R mortgaged his property to S on the 14th December 1902. In 1912 R sold a portion of the property to S for Rs. 400 found due on the mortgage. His right under the mortgage of 1902 was kept alive. Meanwhile, on the 20th July 1907, R had mortgaged his entire property to C who obtained a mortgage-decree and put the property to sale when the plaintiff purchased it. Plaintiff could not, however, obtain possession on account of an objection by S and instituted the present suit for recovery of possession:

Held, (1) that S being in possession of the property as owner his right of redemption was not lost in spite of the purchase made by the plaintiff in execution of mortgage-decree of C; [p. 944, col. 2.]

(2) but that S had only a right of redemption and could not resist the possession of the plaintiff unless he redeemed the property. [p. 944, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—The plaintiff is the appellant in this case. He brought an action to recover possession of the property in dispute on the strength of his purchase at an auction-sale in 1917.

One Ramlal Misser had 10 kathas of land within the Municipality of Bhagalpur. He and his sons are defendants second party in this case. He mortgaged the property to Sarado Prasad, the defendant first party, on the 8th January 1900. This mortgage was satisfied and we are no longer concerned with it.

Ramlal mortgaged the said property again to Sarado Prasad on the 14th December 1902. In 1912 Ramlal sold four kathas out of the aforesaid 10 kathas to Sarado Prasad for Rs. 400 which was found due to him upon his mortgage-bond. In the sale-deed his right under the mortgage of the 14th December 1902 was kept alive and was not extinguished. In the meantime, on the 20th June 1907, Ramlal mortgaded his entire 10 kathas to Chunilal Marwari and Chunilal obtained a mortgage-decree and put the property to sale. The plaintiff Birinchi Singh purchased this property at the auction-sale held in execution of the aforesaid mortgage. He, therefore, could not obtain possession of the property on account of an objection having been raised by Sarado Prasad. He, therefore, instituted the present suit for recovery of possession.

His contention now is that he has a right to redeem the mortgage of Sarado Prasad dated the 14th December 1902. The Courts below have held that Chunilal knew of the mortgage of Sarado Prasad dated the 14th December 1902 inasmuch as he was a party to the suit on the mortgage of Sarado Prasad for the enforcement of his mortgage of the 8th June 1907, and in that suit it was stated that Sarado Prasad had a second mortgage of the 14th December 1902. Sarado Prasad should, therefore, have been made a party in the mortgage suit brought by Chunilal. His rights, therefore, under the mortgage of the 14th December 1902 were not affected. He occupied two positions, first, that of a mortgagee under his mortgage of the 14th December 1902 which was prior to the mortgage of Chunilal in the enforcement of which the plaintiff purchased the property in question, and, secondly, he was purchaser of the 4 kathas out of the 10 kathas under his kabala of 1912. His right to redeem the mortgage of Chunilal with respect to the 4 kathas purchased by him was, therefore, not extinguished. Chunilal had made Ramlal a party to his suit, but Ramlal had lost all interest in the 4 kathas inasmuch as he had disposed of it in favour of Sarado Prasad. With respect to 4 kathas, therefore, Sarado Prasad was the owner thereof at the time when the mortgage suit of Chunilal was brought. He was, therefore, interested in the redemption of Chunilal's mortgage and, not having been made a party, no opportunity was given to him to redeem. This view is supported by the cases of Hassanbhai v. Umaji (1), Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (2), Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (3), and Parasram Singh v. Pandohi (4). The last mentioned case is the latest case on the subject being of February 1922.

Mr. Jha on behalf of the appellant relies on the Privy Council decision of the case of Ganpat Lal v. Bindbasini Prashad Narayan Singh (5). Upon this decision he contends that the right of redemption, if any, possessed by Sarado Prasad, defendant first party, was extinguished after the sale of the property in execution of which the plaintiff had purchased it. In that case the mortgage-decree was obtained on foot of a mortgage executed by the father of a joint Mitakshara family not having made his sons as parties. The mortgage-debt was admitted to be for family necessity and in fact the sons never disputed their liability either under the mortgage or the decree.

The question, therefore, for determination in that case was whether the interest of the sons in the family property passed by the sale in execution of the mortgage-decree obtained against the father alone. In the circumstances of that case referred to above it was held that the sale of the property passed the interest of the sons also. That case was decided upon the principle of representation and it was upon that principle held that the son's right of redemption was extinguished with the extinction of the father's right and that, unless the sale was set aside upon fresh grounds, the sons could not resist the possession of the purchaser in execution of the mortgage-decree.

Now, in the present case Sarado Prasad, defendant first party, is an out and out purchaser of the interest of Ramlal in the 4 kathas of the land in dispute. Sarado Prasad, therefore, could not represent him in the mortgage-suit brought by Chunilal. There was no question of representation and Sarado Prasad was, therefore, entitled to be made a party and thus to be given an opportunity to redeem the mortgage of Chunilal.

The sale in the present case has not the effect of extinguishing the right of redemption of Sarado Prasad. His mortgage of 1902 must remain alive until it is redeemed, for once a mortgage always a mortgage.

In the case cited above, Parasram Singh v. Pandohi (4), it is said that "all that the plaintiffs (as in the present case) are entitled to is to get back their mortgage-money. After all, they are merely mortgagees and as such are liable to be redeemed by the owner of the property, that is, the mortgagor or whoever represents him. In this case the prior mortgagees, the defendants, having acquired the equity of redemption, stand in the shoes of the mortgagor and are the owners of the property."

This observation exactly applies to the present case where Sarado Prasad, being the prior mortgagee, purchased privately the equity of redemption of Ramlal with respect to 4 kathas of the land in dispute and became the owner thereof.

Dr. Rasbehari Ghosh, in his book on the the Law of Mortgage, at page 625, quotes from Jones in support of the proposition that it is obligatory on the part of the mortgagee to implead all persons interested in the equity of redemption in a suit based on his mortgage. The important passage in the quotation from Jones is as follows:—

"The sale vests the estate in the purchaser subject to redemption by the person interested in it who was not made a party to the proceedings. His only remedy, however, is to redeem. He cannot maintain ejectment against the purchaser. He can not have the sale set aside by intervening by petition in the foreclosure suit. His only right is the right of redemption."

This is a complete answer to the contention of Mr. Jha that the auction-sale in favour of the plaintiff vested the property in him freed from the mortgage in question and that Sarado Prasad ought to have brought a suit against the plaintiff and to have the sale set aside. Sarado Prasad need not have done any of these things. He is in possession of the property as owner thereof and his right of redemption is not lost and in spite of the purchase made by the plaintiff in execution of the mortgage-decree of Chunilal the right of redemption of Sarado Prasad is not lost. I, however, agree with Mr. Jha that Sarado Prasad has only a right of redemption and cannot resist the possession of the plaintiff unless he redeems the property. Therefore, in the present case it is necessary to declare that the plaintiff will be entitled to get possession of the property unless the defendant first party redeems the plaintiff's mortgage within three months of the date that the amount due to the plaintiff on his mortgage in respect of the 4 kathas which was purchased by the defendant first party under his private kabala is ascertained in the Court below. It must be mentioned that the defendant first party's prior mortgage of 1902 subsists only as a lien over the 4 kathas and with respect to the 6 kathas it has absolutely no effect, and that the defendant first party has no right to redeem the entire mortgage of the plaintiff so as to be subrogated to his position as mortgagee of the 10 kathas. The defendant first party's right is confined only to 4 kathas both as prior mortgagee under his mortgage of 1902 and as purchaser under the private kabala, and he has, therefore, to redeem a proportionate share of the mortgage-money due for the 4 kathas. He will, therefore, remain in possession of 4 kathas the remaining 6 kathas being in the possession of the plaintiff.

With these remarks the appeal is dismissed and the case will be sent back to the Munsif in order that he may determine the amount due to the plaintiff which the defendant first party has to pay in order to redeem his mortgage.

In the circumstances of the case, each party will bear his own costs.

Ross, J.—I agree.

JIWAN MAL—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60—Attachment—Gratuity paid by University, whether attachable—Gratuity in consideration of past services, whether debt.

Section 60 (g) of the Civil Procedure Code does not exempt private pensions or pensions payable by a body other than Government from attachment. A pension or gratuity payable by a University does not, therefore, fall within the purview of the section.

Janki Das v. E. I. Ry. Company, 6 A. 634; A. W. N. (1884) 210; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 247, distinguished.

Bhoyrub Chunder Roy v. Madhub Chunder Sen, 6 C. L. R. 19, referred to.

The Syndicate of the Punjab University recommended a gratuity to be paid to the judgment-debtor in consideration of past services which the latter had rendered to the University, but before the gratuity could be paid to him it was attached by the decree-holder in execution of his decree against the judgment-debtor:

Held*, (1) that the gratuity not being a pension granted by Government was not exempt from attachment under section 60 (g) of the Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that the gratuity constituted a debt payable by the University to the judgment-debtor and was, therefore, liable to attachment under section 60 of the Code.

Miscellaneous second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 27th April 1922, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 12th July 1921.

Lala L. C. Mehra, for the Appellant.

Lala Durga Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 14th of December 1920 the respondent Jiwan Mal obtained a money-decree against the appellant for Rs. 1,177 from the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge at Lahore. In execution of this decree he attached a certain gratuity which the appellant was entitled to receive from the Senate of the Punjab University. On the 6th of May 1921 a cheque was received by the Executing Court from the office of the University and made over to the decree-holder on the same day. On the 9th of May 1921 the judgment-debtor filed an objection that the gratuity was not liable to attachment under section 60 (g) of the Civil Procedure Code and that the money should not be paid to the decree-holder. The cheque, however, had already been paid and the money realised by the decree-holder. Both the Courts below have concurrently found that section 60 (g) had no application, and that the exemption contained therein related to gratuities payable to Government servants only. The objection filed by the judgment-debtor has accordingly been disallowed, and he has now come up in second appeal to this Court.

Two points have been urged before me by Mr. L. C. Mehra who has appeared on behalf of the appellant. Firstly, it is contended that the gratuity payable by a University to its servants is in the nature of a Government pension and consequently exempt from attachment under section 60 (g) of the Civil Procedure Code. With this contention I am unable to agree. Section 60 (g) provides that stipends and gratuities allowed to pensioners of the Government, or payable out of any Service Family Pension Fund notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor-General in Council in this behalf, and political pensions, shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution of a decree. This does not exempt private pensions or pensions payable by a body other than Government from attachment, and no authority has been cited before me in support of the contention that a pension or a gratuity payable by a University is a pension or gratuity falling within the purview of section 60 (g) of the Civil Procedure Code.

AJTI CHAUDHURI v. JANAK LAL CHAUDHURI.

Jankl Das v. E. I. Ry. Company (1), cited by the appellant's Counsel does not in any way help him. In that case a certain amount of bonus had been recommended by the Traffic Manager for a servant in the employment of the East India Railway Company in consideration of long and good services. The recommendation was sanctioned and the amount of the bonus was received by the District Pay Master. Before payment could be made the money was attached in execution of a decree. It was held that the money was not liable to attachment in execution of the decree, inasmuch as the bestowal of the money was a gift of moveable property of date subsequent to the date of the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, and that, as it was not evidenced by a registered instrument, it could only be affected by actual delivery which had not been made in that case. It is clear that this judgment can have no bearing whatever on the present case. There was no decision in that case on the question whether a bonus payable to a servent of the Railway Company was or was not exempt from attachment under section 266 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. The next case cited was Bhoyrub Chunder Roy v. Madhub Chunder Sen (2). That case, instead of supporting the appellant, clearly supports the respondent in his contention that a private pension is attachable in execution of a decree.

Next, it is contended that the gratuity in question had not become due and payable when the attachment was effected and was consequently not a debt or property belonging to the judgment-debtor. This objection was not taken by the judgment-debtor in the written objection filed by him in the Court of first instance, and he was not, therefore, entitled to take it in his grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. Further, in the lower Appellate Court also he appears to have dropped this contention as there is no adjudication of the point in the judgment passed by that Court. Mr. L. C. Mehra, however, urges that the point was distinctly raised and argued by him before the lower Appellate Court and that he is not responsible if that Court has failed to give a decision thereon. He has filed no affidavit in support of this allegation, and I am unable to hold, in the absence of any such affidavit, that the point was argued and left undecided by the learned Judge of the Court below. In any case, I am of opinion that there is no substance in this contention. The gratuity, which had been recommended by the Syndicate of the Punjab University to be paid to the appellant, was in consideration of past services which the latter had rendered to the University, and constituted a debt which could be attached under section 60 of the Civil Procedure Code. I do not see any force in this appeal and dismiss it with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal under the Letters Patent on behalf of the defendant No. 2 in the suit from a decision of Mr. Justice Adami, dated the 7th December 1922.

The suit out of which the appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiffs on the 7th August 1919 to enforce payment of a mortgage-bond by sale of the security granted under the bond. The bond was executed on the 3rd July 1911 by Musammat Ruko Chaudhurain, widow of Uchit Chaudhuri, on behalf of herself and her two sons, Ajti Chaudhuri, who is the defendant No. 2, and Backkan Chaudhuri, who is the deceased husband of the defendant No. 3 It was clear that the defendant No. 3, as the widow of Backkan Chaudhuri, had no interest in the property on his death, the family being joint and she ought not to have been added as party This was so decided by the Trial Court and no question now arises upon that point. The bond was executed to secure a loan granted to Musammat Ruko Chaudhurain said to have been taken for the purposes of the marriage of her daughter Adaya, since deceased. The Musammat did not appear in the suit and filed no written statement. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3, that is, her son and daughter-in-law, did appear and by their written statements contested the validity of the bond, alleged that it was without consideration and that there was no necessity for taking the loan mentioned therein and they had not been benefitted by it. They further contended in their written statement that the produce and income of the lands in possession of their mother was quite sufficient for her maintenance and necessary expenses of herself and the other defendants and, such being the case, the taking of the loan by their mother was entirely without necessity.

The learned Munsif before whom the case came for trial found that the payment of consideration had been proved. He further found that the money was used for the payment of the marriage expenses of the first defendant's deceased daughter, and on these findings he considered that the necessity for the loan had been made out. He did not in terms consider whether the first defendant had any necessity to borrow; that is to say, whether the state of her finances was such that she was unable to find the sum of Rs. 200 which were necessary for the purposes of the marriage of her daughter.

From that decision there was an appeal by the defendant No. 2, Ajti Chaudhuri. The learned District Judge who heard the appeal considered that, even on the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses, it had not been made out to his satisfaction that the consideration for the bond, that is to say, the previous loans, had in fact passed. He considered the surrounding circumstances and the probablities of the case and arrived at the conclusion, based partly upon the probabilities and partly upon the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses themselves, that this sum of Rs. 200 had never in fact been advanced to the widow. He considered the evidence as to the passing of consideration most unsatisfactory and unreliable and, although the defendant No. 1 did not herself give evidence, which in his opinion raised a presumption in the plaintiff's favour, he considered that the circumstances which he had already mentioned, namely, the unreliability of the evidence of the plaintiffs and the probabilites of the case, were more than sufficient to outweigh any presumption arising from the failure of the defendant No. 1 to give evidence. He accordingly held that no consideration for the bond passed. He further proceeded to consider whether in fact there was any necessity for the loan and, dealing with this question, he arrived at the conclusion that the defendant No. 1 upon the death of her husband having come into 12 bighas of land and having a very small family to maintain it was very unlikely that she would not have funds in her hands sufficient to pay for the marriage of any daughter, supposing that she had any daughter about to be married. It ought to be mentioned that one of the issues in the case was, whether in fact there was any daughter of this lady of the name of Adaya who had been married upon the occasion when the loan was taken. The learned District Judge having arrived at the conclusion that no consideration passed and that it had not been shown that this lady was actually in need of money for the marriage, apparently did not considerr it necessary to determine the question whether in fact she had this daughter Adaya or not. He dealt with the case upon the supposition that such a daughter did exist and finally he arrived at the conclusion that there was no necessity for any loan. He further points out, which was the fact, that the evidence upon the plaintiffs' side did not show that the plaintiffs made any enquiry as to necessity. He accordingly allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

From that decision a second appeal was preferred to this Court. The learned Judge was not satisfied with the manner in which the District Judge in first appeal had arrived at his conclusions of fact. He considered that, on the question of consideration, the production of the bond and the failure of the widow to appear and give evidence in the suit was sufficient to prove the passing of consideration, and that the onus was thereupon shifted to the contesting defendants to disprove execution and payment of the money advanced. He considered that the learned District Judge had wrongly placed the onus in this respect. In dealing with the question of legal necessity, he referred to the fact that the learned District Judge had not found as a fact whether the widow had a daughter Adaya or not, and that he ought to have determined this question but having failed to do so he considered that the Munsif's findings upon that point must stand. He then says: "There being a daughter I think I must hold that the expenses of the marriage of the daughter would be a legal necessity" and adds that the lower Appellate Court had decided the question of necessity merely on inferences and probabilities and he did not consider that its findings as to necessity could be held to be proper findings of fact. For these reasons he set aside the decision of the District Judge and sent back the case for re-hearing by him.

From that decision the defendant No. 2 has appealed. There can be no doubt that this Court in second appeal is bound by the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court and ought not lightly to disturb those findings of fact unless it is shown either that the learned Judge has gone wrong on some question of law, or that there is no evidence to support the findings. It is unnecessary in this appeal to consider whether the decision of the learned Judge of this Court was right in so far as it determined that the Subordinate Judge had not dealt properly with the question of passing of consideration, but I think, with great respect to the learned Judge of this Court, that he failed to appreciate exactly what it is necessary to prove in order to establish what is known as legal necessity. The learned District Judge based his decision partly upon the ground that no necessity for the loan had been made out and, therefore, that the mortgage of the family property was not binding upon that property The reason which induced him to arrive at this conclusion was that, even if the marriage of a daughter might be regarded as an occasion upon which the manager or other person in charge of family property might be entitled to charge the property for the purpose of raising money to provide for the marriage, still, the plaintiffs in a suit based upon a mortgage charging the family property for such a purpose must prove not only the occasion upon which the money was borrowed but also that there was a real necessity to borrow money at that time and that some evidence at all events ought to be given to show that the borrower was not in sufficient funds to perform the marriage or other necessary ceremony in the family. It appears from the evidence in this case that there was an entire failure on the part of the plaintiffs either to prove that the widow was not possessed of sufficient funds to pay for the marriage of her daughter or that the plaintiffs, when the loan was advanced, made any enquiries as to that necessity. We have asked the learned Vakil for the respondents to point out to us from the evidence, if he can, any passage in which it was alleged that the widow was really in need of funds for the purposes for which the money was borrowed. He was unable to do so, but could merely point to passages in which it was said that the money was borrowed for the marriage. In my opinion the decision of the District Judge was based upon a proper appreciation of the evidence which it is necessary in such cases to prove and his decision on this point appears to me clearly to have been justified by a consideration of the evidence before him. With great respect to the learned Judge of this Court he appears not to have dealt with the question of whether or not the widow was in fact in funds for the purpose for which the money was borrowed. He appears to have considered that, if the money was borrowed for the expenses of the marriage ceremony that in itself was quite sufficient to justify the loan without any proof that there was in fact necessity for borrowing money for that purpose. It follows, therefore, that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court cannot be supported and must be set aside and the decision of the learned, District Judge restored.

It was contended that, as the defedant No. 1 did not appear, the decree of the Munsif ought to be allowed to stand as against her. No claim for a personal decree against that defendant upon the covenant to re-pay the money was made and in fact no such decree could have been granted because the due date of the bond was the 1st May 1912 and when the present suit was instituted in 1919 any personal claim against the executant of the bond for the recovery of the money was barred by limitation. Further, it is quite clear that if the family property is not bound by a mortgage of this sort there can be no decree against the undivided share in that property belonging to one or other of the executants of the bond who might be liable thereunder. In the present case it has not been shown that the widow had any interest in the property at all beyond possibly some right to maintenance. The property is really that of her sons and they being minors she was acting on their behalf. The only question for decision in such circumstances was, whether the bond was valid on the ground that there was legal necessity or benefit to the estate by reason of the loan.

I ought to add that, although the defendant No. 1 did not appeal from the decision of the Munsif, the defendant No. 2 did so appeal and in my opinion the District Judge was quite competent under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 33 to set aside the whole decree although the defendant No. 1 had not appealed. The decree was a mortgage decree against the property and as such a decree could not stand, the Court had power to set it aside entirely. Moreover, it is not shown that the defendant No. 1 had any interest in the property at all and, therefore, the effect of setting aside this decree will in no way prejudice her interests.

It was also contended during the course of the argument that no appeal lay from the order of Mr. Justice Adami sending back the case for re-hearing to the Court of the District Judge, and the case of Raghunandan Singh v. Jadunandan Singh (1) was relied upon for this proposition. That case, however, is clearly distinguishable from the present. In that case the order of remand which was made was an order made by a Subordinate Court. The appeal in the present case is from a judgment of a Single Judge of this Court and under the Letters Patent there is an apeal to a Division Bench from a judgment of a Single Judge of this Court. The question had to be considered by a Bench over which I presided in the case of Munshi Lal v. Mahanth Ramasis Puri (2). The decision we arrived at in that case was that, where the Judge of this Court without setting aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court merely remands the case for the finding of an issue with directions to return that finding before finally disposing of the appeal that is not a judgment within the meaning of the Letters Patent, but where the Judge of this Court sets aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and orders a re-trial by that Court that decision amounts to a judgment within the Letters Patent, and in such cases an appeal is permissible from the decision. The present case is governed by the case of Munshi Lal v. Mahanth Ramasis Puri (2) and an appeal, therefore, lies.

The result is, that this appeal must be allowed and the judgment of the District Judge restored. With regard to the costs of the suit and the subsequent appeals the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are entitled to their costs of the suit. The defendant No. 2 is entitled to his costs of the appeal to the Subordinate Judge and of the appeal to this Court and of the present appeal under the Letters Patent.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 9—Holder in due course, who is—Pro-note payable on demand, negotiation of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 1, whether applicable to appeals—Appeal, joint, when may be preferred.

To constitute a person a holder in due course three things are necessary, (1) that the holder of the promissory-note must be a holder for consideration, (2) that it must have been transferred to him before the amount mentioned in it became payable, and (3) that the transferee must be a transferee in good faith, and that he should not have any reason to believe that there was any defect in the title of the transferor. [p. 951, col. 2.]

Where a promissory-note payable on demand is negotiated, it is not deemed to be overdue for the purpose of affecting the holder with defects of title, of which he had no notice, by reason that it appears that a reasonable time for presenting it for payment has elapsed since its issue. [p. 952, col. 2.]

D. N. Shah & Co. v. Bengal National Bank, Ltd., 60 Ind. Cas. 940; 47 C. 861; 33 C. L. J. 541, relied on.

The rule laid down in O. I, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code is intended to enable persons aggrieved by the same act or having the same right to relief to join in one suit instead of bringing separate suits, and is also applicable to appeals. [p. 951, col. 2.]

Plaintiff sued defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the recovery of a certain amount due on a pro-note of which he claimed to be the holder in due course and which defendant No. 1 had executed in favour of defendant No. 2 and which the latter had transferred to the plaintiff. The suit was dismissed as against defendant No. 1 but was decreed against defendant No. 2. Plaintiff and defendant No. 2 filed a joint appeal claiming that the suit should be decreed against defendant No. 1 also:

Held, that, having regard to the provisions of O. I, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was open to the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 to prefer a joint appeal against defendant No. 1 for the same relief, inasmuch as it involved a common question, viz., whether defendant No. 1 could or could not be held liable for the plaintiff's claim. [p. 951, col. 2.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 23rd June 1919.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Appellants.

Mr. Feroz-ud-Din Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit to recover money due on a promissory-note executed on the 12th of February 1917 by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2 and transferred by the latter to the plaintiff by indorsement, dated the 26th of June 1918. Defendant No. 1 admitted the execution of the pro-note but denied receipt of the consideration and pleaded, further, that the plaintiff was not a holder in due course and that the transfer in his favour was collusive and also without consideration. Defendant No. 2 admitted the claim and did not make any defence to the suit. The following issues were framed:—

(1) Is the plaintiff not the holder in due course of the pro-note in suit?

(2) If issue No. 1 is found in favour of the plaintiff, can defendant No. 1 deny the validity of the pro-note and receipt of the consideration having regard to the provisions of section 120 of the Negotiable Instruments Act

(3) If issue No. 2 is found in favour of defendant No. 1, was the pro-note executed without consideration?

(4) If issues Nos. 2 and 3 are found in favour of defendant No. 1, to what relief is the plaintiff entitled and against whom?

The Senior Subordinate Judge found that the plaintiff was not a holder in due course within the meaning of section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and, therefore, dismissed the suit as against defendant No. 1. He further held that it had not been proved that defendant No. 2 had paid any consideration to defendant No. 1, but decreed the claim in full as against the former on the ground that he had admitted the receipt of the consideration and had not contested the plaintiff's claim.

The plaintiff and defendant No. 2 have now preferred a joint appeal to this Court against this decree, and it has been contended on their behalf that the suit should also have been decreed against defendant No. 1 who was the original maker of the note.

A preliminary objection has been raised that a joint appeal is not maintainable, inasmuch as the interests of the plaintiff are not identical with those of defendant No. 2, and that if both of them are aggrieved by this decree, they should file separate appeals on separate Court-fees. In our opinion there is no force in this objection. A reference to O. I, r. 1, of the Civil Procedure Code makes it clear that all persons may be joined in one suit as plaintiffs in whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if such persons brought separate suits, any common question of law or fact would arise. The same rule applies to appeals also, and the common question which the Courts would be called upon to determine if separate appeals were filed would be whether defendant No. 1 can or cannot be held liable for the plaintiff's claim. The rule is intended to enable persons aggrieved by the same act or having the same right to relief to join in one suit instead of bringing separate suits. We do not, therefore, think that there is any legal bar to the plaintiff and defendant No. 2 joining together as appellants and preferring a joint appeal in this Court and we must overrule the objection.

The main question for determination is, whether the plaintiff is a holder in due course so as to enable him to maintain this suit as against defendant No. 1 who says he has received no consideration from defendant No. 2 for the pro-note in question. A "holder in due course" has been defined in section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act as follows:—

"'Holder in due course' means any person who for consideration became the possessor of a Promissory-note, Bill of Exchange or Cheque if payable to bearer or the payee or indorsee thereof, if payable to, or to the order of, a payee, before the amount mentioned in it became payable and without having sufficient cause to believe that any defect existed in the title of the person from whom he derived his title."

It will be observed from this definition that to constitute a person a holder in due course three things are necessary, (1) that the holder of the promissory-note must be a holder for consideration; (2) that it must have been transferred to him before the amount mentioned in it became payable, and (3) that the transferee must be a transferee in good faith, and that he should not have any reason to believe that there was any defect in the title of the transferor. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was not a holder in due course inasmuch as the promissory-note had not been indorsed in his favour before it become payable. In his opinion a note payable on demand is a present debt and is due and payable at once without demand, and as in the present case the note was a note payable on demand, he holds that it became payable as soon as it was executed and that no demand was necessary. For the appellants it is contended that a promissary-note payable on demand does not become payable until a demand is actually made, and that as in this case, there is no evidence to show that the transfer was made after the demand, it is a perfectly valid transfer and not open to objection on the part of defendant No. 1. With this contention we are unable to agree. There is no doubt that for the purpose of limitation a promissory-note payable on demand would be a present debt payable without demand, that the liability of the maker would accrue from the date of the note itself and that the Statute of Limitation would begin to run in his favour from the date of the note. But we do not think that these principles have any application to a case under section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The rule has been laid down in the case of D. N. Shah & Co. v. Bengal National Bank, Ltd. (1) as follows:—"The true rule applicable is that, where a promissory-note payable on demand is negotiated, it is not deemed to be over due, for the purpose of affecting the holder with defects of title, of which he had no notice, by reason that it appears that a reasonable time for presenting it for payment has elapsed since its issue". We are in full agreement with this view and are of opinion that the ground on which the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiff was not a holder in due course cannot be sustained.

The important point to consider is, whether the plaintiff paid any consideration for this pro-note to defendant No. 2. It is alleged by the plaintiff that he paid Rs. 5,000 in cash to the defendant, Miran Bakhsh, when the transfer was made in his (plaintiff's) favour, but he is unable to say whether the payment was made in currency-notes or in silver. It seems to us hardly likely that if the plaintiff had made any payment, he would forget how the payment was effected; and would not be able to state whether the payment was in currency-notes or in silver. It is also clear from the evidence that the plaintiff, Bulaki Mal, who is a well-known money-lender, knew the parties before the transaction was effected, and there can be no doubt that he must also have known the circumstances under which the pro-note was originally executed. It is in evidence that Abdul Rahim, defendant No. 1, had executed a deed of mortgage in favour of one Rai Bahadur Amar Nath, that the latter brought a criminal case of cheating against Abdul Rahim in the Court of the District Magistrate of Lahore, and that, in order to escape conviction, he prevailed upon Miran Bakhsh, defendant No. 2, to execute a surety-deed in favour of the complainant Rai Bahadur Amar Nath and to make a promise that he would pay off the mortgage within a week from the date of the surety-deed. It is alleged by defendant No. 1 that he executed this pro-note in favour of defendant No. 2 to secure him for the payment which the latter had promised to make to the mortgagee Rai Bahadur Amar Nath but that, as Miran Bakhsh failed to carry out his promise and to pay off Amar Nath, the pro-note remained altogether ineffectual. There is evidence on the record to show that the plaintiff was cognisant of all these facts, and, in these circumstances, it is impossible to believe that the plaintiff would pay a large sum of Rs. 5,000 to the defendant Miran Bakhsh when he knew that the latter had actually paid nothing to the maker of the promissory-note. Further, it is admitted that the defendant Miran Bakhsh owed a sum of about Rs. 6,000 already to the plaintiff when the indorsement in his favour was made and that this money had been borrowed on the security of a house mortgaged in favour of the plaintiff. It seems to us most unlikely that the plaintiff would advance a further sum of Rs. 5,000 to the defendant Miran Bakhsh on practically no security whatever when even the previous debt was outstanding. It is also significant that the plaintiff has not produced any books of account in support of his claim, and we cannot for a moment believe that the plaintiff would not produce his books or fail to make any entries therein if the advance had actually been made. We cannot also lose sight of the fact that the plaintiff Bulaki Mal has got a decree against Miran Bakhsh, defendant No. 2, who is said to be a man of property and from whom he can easily recover his decretal amount. Why he should be anxious to get a decree against defendant No. 1 also (unless it be in the interests of Miran Bakhsh, defendant No. 2), has not been explainted, and it seems to us, in these circumstances, that there is considerable force in the argument of the learned Counsel for the respondent that the interests of the plaintiff and Miran Bakhsh, defendant No. 2, are identical and that they are acting in collusion with one another. For the appellants reliance has been placed on section 118 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, and it is contended that, though there is very little direct evidence on the record as regards payment, it should be presumed that the transfer was for consideration and that the plaintiff was a holder in due course. There is no doubt that the general presumption is in favour of the plaintiff, but the presumption is always a rebuttable presumption, and the circumstances to which we have already alluded are sufficient, in our opinion, to shift the onus on to the plaintiff to prove that he was a holder for consideration. With the exception of the statement of the plaintiff and defendant No. 2, there is no evidence on the record in support of this payment which we consider wholly insufficient and we must accordingly hold that payment of the consideration has not been established, and that the plaintiff is not a holder in due course within the meaning of section 9 of the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Next, section 43 is relied on, and it is contended that the plaintiff is entitled to succeed even if he is not a holder in due course. It is clear, however, that section 43 cannot be of any assistance to the plaintiff unless he is a holder for consideration. On this question we have already found in the negative and this contention also must, therefore, be overruled. In our opinion the plaintiff's suit has been rightly dismissed as against defendant No. 1, and we do not see any reason to interfere with the judgment of the Court below.

The result is, that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The lower Court, while dismissing the suit, did not allow any costs to defendant No. 1. The latter has filed cross-objections with regard to costs. In our opinion there was no reason why costs should not have been allowed, especially when the learned Senior Subordinate Judge found that defendant No. 2 had not paid any consideration to defendant No. 1 for the pro-note in suit. We allow the cross-objections and direct that defendant No. 1 should get his costs in the lower Court as well.

Art. 127 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act presupposes the continuation of a joint family and of the joint family property till the date of suit and an exclusion from the enjoyment of such joint property of one party by another. It does not apply to a case where a family has separated and divided its property prior to the suit.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpore, dated the 24th of February 1923.

Mr. Bhagwati Shanker, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by the plaintiffs-appellants for the recovery of money due on account of their share in four bonds which the defendants are stated to have realised from their common debtors. It appears that if the parties formed a joint family at the time when the loans in question were advanced to those persons. They separated seven years ago; but the bonds evidencing the loans in question remained the joint property of the parties. Subsequent to the separation, the defendants are said to have realised the money due on the said bonds to the exclusion of the plaintiffs. The defence was that one of the bonds had fallen to the share of the defendants by partition and that the money due on another bond which was joint was realised by both the parties jointly. It was also alleged that the remaining two bonds were obtained by the defendants after partition and were their exclusive property. The Court of first instance decreed the claim, holding that all the four bonds were obtained when the family was joint, that they remained the joint property of the parties after they had separated seven years prior to the suit, and that the defendants were liable to pay the plaintiffs their share of the said bonds which they had realised. The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion in respect of one of the bonds that its money was realised by defendants about five years prior to the suit; and, applying Article 62 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), it held that the claim of the plaintiffs in regard to their share of the money due on that bond was barred by limitation. In applying that Article it followed the decisions of this Court in Amina Bibi v. Najmunnissa Bibi (1) and Abdul Gaffar v. Nur Jahan Begum (2). The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants relies on the decision in Umardaraz Ali Khan v. Wilayat Ali Khan (3) but, as explained in the decisions first cited, the main question for determination in the last mentioned case was, whether Article 123 or Article 120 was applicable to the case. Article 62 was not considered because, both under Article 62 and Article 120, the claim was in that case beyond time. It is also contended that Article 127 of the Indian Limitation Act would in any case apply; but that Article does not apply where a family has, as in this case, separated and divided its property prior to the suit. That Article pre-supposes the continuation of the joint family and of the joint family property till the date of the suit and an exclusion from the enjoyment of such joint family property of one party by another. The decision in Mahomed Riasat Ali v. Hasin Banu (4) is also inapplicable, because that was a suit by one heir against another heir for the recovery of property which the other had appropriated. It was also contended that by virtue of a decision of a panchayat the money realised by the defendants was allowed to remain with them as a deposit and that the plaintiffs had no knowledge before that panchayat was held as to whether the defendants had realised the same, but the story of the panchayat was disbelieved by the lower Appellate Court. There was no fraud specifically pleaded or alleged. The appeal is, therefore, rejected.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—The plaintiffs are the appellants. The plaintiff No. 1 and the predecessors of the plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 11 purchased at a revenue sale the ijmali Khata of mahal named Raipatti, Tauzi No. 3142, on the 6th January 1883. Khata No. 1 of that Tauzi was purchased at a revenue sale by one Balbhadra Sahay on 10th January 1901. He sold a part of it on the 21st December 1901 to plaintiffs Nos. 12 to 14, and the remainder on the 2nd February 1902 to plaintiff No. 15.

Thus, the plaintiffs are now the owners of the entire Mahal Raipatti bearing Tauzi No. 3142. The serial number of this Mahal was 82 in the register of 1249. It was subsequently altered to No. 114 and then to No. 2007 (Tauzi) and now it bears Tauzi No. 3142.

Close to this, there is another Mahal of the same name Raipatti the serial number whereof was 84 in the register of 1249 which was altered to No. 116 and then to No. 2009 (Tauzi) and now it bears Tauzi No. 3143. This was purchased in 1899 at a revenue sale by defendants Nos. 2 to 3 in the farzi name of their servant Gopal Das from whom they obtained a ladavi deed (Exhibit 49) and then sold it to defendant No. 1 Jai Gobind Pandey, brother of defendant No. 6, who is the servant and gomashta of defendants Nos. 2 to 3. Defendants Nos. 1 and 6 are members of a joint family and are joint in mess and business. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 are the thicadars of the said Mahal. The two Mahals Raipatti bearing Tauzi Nos. 3142 and 3143 are situate in Pargana Kasmar, District Saran.

The dispute in this case concerns a block of land shown and designated as Mouza "Babhangawan" in the Thak and the Revenue Survey maps of 1843-44, bearing No. 53, covering an area of 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles defined by boundaries noted therein. Contiguous to the south east of "Babhangawan" are the lands shown in the Thak and the Revenue maps of 1843-44 in No. 179 under the name of Mouza "Kedarpura Bhabhangawan", with an area of 267 acres 1 rood 3 poles.

The plaintiffs' case is that the aforesaid two Thak and Survey Maps of 1843-44 represent, respectively, the lands of Mouzas "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura Babhangawan" which are distinct and separate from each other; the former appertains to the plaintiff's Mahal Raipatti bearing Tauzi No. 3142, and the latter to mahal Raipatti Tauzi No. 3143, belonging to the defendants; that the lands in dispute knows as "Babhangawan" were settled with the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs as part and parcel of their mahal Raipatti bearing Tauzi No. 3142 and have been all along in their possession until recently when, after their re-appearance from the river Ganges, the defendants illegally began to interfere with their possession which led to criminal cases between the parties in 1908-09 (vide Exhibits 67, 80 and 82) in which the defendants were worsted, but, ultimately, they caused a proceeding under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure to be instituted in the Court of the Magistrate with the result that the Magistrate in a summary way by his order of the 23rd December 1913 declared the posssession of the defendants over 1047 bighas of land of Mouza "Babhangawan" as appertaining to the defendants' Tauzi No. 3143, and, emboldened by this order, the defendants dispossessed the plaintiffs of the remaining lands of Mouza "Babhangawan" on the 10th January 1914; that the defendants have no title or possession over the lands in suit and had never possesssion of the same before the order of the Criminal Court, nor does the land in dispute, called Mauza "Babhangawan," appertain to the defendants' Tauzi No. 3143. On these allegations the plaintiffs commenced their action by filing a plaint on the 21st December 1914 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Saran, for recovery of possession of the disputed lands with mesne profits, after a declaration of their title thereto.

The defendants, other than the proprietors of Tauzi No. 3143, were impleaded in the cause because they were parties in the proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Defendant No. 224 is said to be the parzidar of plaintiff No. 1 and his name stands in the Land Registration Office. The defendant No. 1 as proprietor of Tauzi No. 3143 is the chief contending defendant. His defence in short is, that the disputed lands appertain to Mahal Raipatti bearing Tauzi No. 3143 belonging to the defendants; that it never appertained to plaintiffs' Tauzi No. 3142; that the defendants are in possession of the lands in dispute as appertaining to their Tauzi as recognised and declared by the proceedeing under section 145 and that the plaintiffs have neither any title nor possession of the same, and that the suit is, therefore, liable to be dismissed. It is not necessary at this stage to give the detailed allegations of the defendants upon which the defendants base their claim. They will have to be referred to in the course of the judgment hereafter.

The defendants took other pleas which will appear from the issues framed by the Court below, which are as follows:—

Issues Nos. 1 and 5 relating to the frame and maintainability of the suit; the jurisdiction of the Court to try; the valuation and cause of action were found in favour of the plaintiffs and do not arise in this appeal. The remaining issues are as follows:—

"Is the suit barred by general and special Law of Limitation?" (Issue No. 4)

"Have the plaintiffs any title to disputed land?" (Issue No. 6).

"Whether the disputed property, namely, the lands measuring 771 bighas 2 roods 37 poles named as village Babhangawan appertain to plaintiffs' Mahal Raipatti, Tauzi No. 3142, or mahal Raipatti Tauzi No. 3143?" (Issue No. 7).

"Are the plaintiffs entitled to get possession of the land in suit?" (Issue No. 8).

"To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled?" (Issue Do. 9).

The learned Subrodinate Judge decided these issues against the plaintiffs, and dismissed their suit, except with respect to 33 bighas 3 kathas. As regards 33 bighas 3 kathas, he held that the plaintiffs had proved their title and were in possession of the same as declared under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the defendants did not dispute the plaintiffs' title or possession. He directed this to be noted in the decree. The plaintiffs have come to this Court in appeal and submit that the decision of the Court below is wrong and untenable.

The appeal is resisted by the respondent, who was contesting defendant in the Court below. Mr. Sultan Ahmed has argued the case on behalf of the appellants, and Mr. Hasan Imam on behalf of the respondents.

The first and foremost question that arises for determination is as to which of the two Tauzi Nos. 3142 and 3143 the lands in suit appertain (Issue No. 7). These lands have been depicted in the Revenue Survey Map No. 53 of 1843-44 wherein they have been designated as Mauza "Babhangawan."

The plaintiffs' case is, that the entire Mauza "Babhangawan" was exclusively settled by Government with Ghinnu Singh, admittedly their predecessor-in-interest, at the time of the Decennial Settlement of 1197 (1790 A. D.) which subsequently became permanent, and that Mauza "Kedarpura" which is contiguous to it on the south-west and is a distinct and separate village and settled with Parbhu Singh, admittedly the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants. The defendants, on the other hand, state that "Babhangawan and Kedarpura" are not two separate Mauzas but are one and the same though called differently, sometimes as "Babhangawan" sometimes as "Kedarpura Babhagawan" and sometimes as "Babhangawan Kedarpura", the lands whereof bearing the Kitabi area of 3488 bighas 15 kathas along with many other Mauzas were at the Decinnial Settlement of 1197 settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh in the proportion of two-thirds and one-third respectively, that is, 2321 bighas odd with Parbhu Singh and 1161 bighas with Ghinnu Singh. Ghinnu Singh was to pay proportionate Government revenue of Rs. 561 odd for the lands of the Mauza settled with him and Parbhu Singh was to pay Rs. 1,151 for the land settled with him, and that in the year 1207 Fasli (1800), with the exception of a few bighas, all the lands of the Mauza fell into the river Ganges and on the application of Ghinnu Singh an Amin was deputed by the Collector to ascertain the quantity of the lands washed away by the Ganges; that the amin reported that out of an area of 2321 bighas, which was comprised in Parbhu Singh's portion of the Mauza, only 75 bighas 2 kathas were left and of Ghinnu Singh's share, which originally contained 1161 bighas only 33 bighas 3 kathas, were forthcoming, the remaining lands of both the shares having been washed away, that as a result of this enquiry the revenue payable by Ghinnu Singh was reduced with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council to the extent of Rs. 347 odd, thus leaving the reduced jama of Rs. 213 odd for the Mauza, but that the revenue payable by Parbhu Singh was not at all reduced and when the lands of the Mauza re-appeared the defendants took possession of the same and are continuously in possession since then and that the plaintiffs have never been in possession of any land in excess of 33 bighas 3 kathas which was found in the possession of Ghinnu Singh after the diluvion of the lands of the Mauza in 1800 when the Decennial Settlement expired and the Permanent Settlement came into operation, that if, as alleged by the plaintiffs, the Revenue Survery of 1843 has measured the lands in Suit No. 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles as situated in Mauza "Babhangawan" appertaining to Tauzi No. 3142 and 267 acres 1 rood 2 poles as situated in a separate Mauza "Babhangawan Kedarpura" or "Kedarpura Babhangawan" the Revenue Survey measurements and map are wrong inasmuch as there were no two Mauzas, nor that any portion of the land separately appertained to the two tauzis and the said measurements and maps are not binding upon the defendants.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" are two distinct and separate Mauzas within specified boundaries as alleged by the plaintiffs. In this view he is supported by the overwhelming documentary evidence filed in the case. A copy of the register (called Seh sale or thirty years register) (Exhibit Z-75) prepared in 1224 (1816) purports to contain statement of facts relating to the Settlement of the Mauzas in the Mahal for 30 years from 1168-1197 Fasli (1761-1790), that is, from before the grant of the Dewani of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa to the East Indian Company in 1765 and the assumption of the administration of revenue by the said Company. It shows that "Kedarpura" and "Babhangawan" are two distinct and separate Mauzas and has entered them separately: "Kedarpura" as being one Mauza and "Babhangawan" as being another Mauza. The remark column against both the villages shows that in the Decennial Settlement of 1197 the village of "Babhangawan" was settled along with "Kedarpura" for ten years with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh in separate shares. The description in the kabuliyat of Parbhu Singh (Exhibit L-1) is "Babhangawan Kedarpura"—annual jama Rs. 1,151; and in the kabuliyat of Ghinnu Singh (Exhibit L-2) the description is "Kedarpura Babhangawan"—annual jama Rs. 561-1-2. Reading these descriptions with the aforesaid Register it would appear that both the Mauzas were settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh in separate shares. The applications of Parbhu Singh for reduction of revenue on account of diluvion (Exhibits 70 and 71) of 2nd December 1799 and 30th November 1800, the jamabandi filed by Ghinnu Singh (Exhibit 137) for 1800-01, the separate Tirijs filed in 1207 by Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh (Exhibits 72 and P), the reports of Lachman Singh Kanungo of the years 1817, 1819-20 and 1822 (Exhibits N-2, 75 and M-1), who was directed to find out the diluviated area of the two Mouzas, the report of the Board of Revenue of 5th March 1824 upon the application of Banwari (Exhibit 81), the Quinquennial Register of 1790 to 1838 (Exhibit U), the petition (Exhibit Z-132) of Hinglaj Singh, purchaser of a portion of Tauzi No. 3142, dated 29th January 1841 the Collectorate Settlement Registers of 1249 (1841 to 1842) (Exhibits T-1 and 13) with respect to the two mahals clearly show that "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" were two separate Mauzas and that both the Mauzas were comprised in the Settlement with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh. The Thakbust which preceded the Scientific Revenue Survey has delineated the boundaries of the two Mauzas separately describing one as "Babhangawan" and the other as "Kedarpura Babhangawan" (Exhibits 79 and S respectively). The Thakbast was prepared on 5th January 1843 with due publicity and contains the signature of the proprietors of the Mauzas concerned and of the neighbouring Mouzas (Vide Exhibits R and Q). The Professional and the Scientific Survey measured the two villages separately and prepared two separate maps. The map of "Babhangawan" (Exhibit 5) bears No. 53 and that of "Kedarpura" bears No. 179 (Exhibit 33). The word 'Babhangwan" is affixed in this map to the word "Kedarpura," probably with a view to distinguish it from other villages of the same name and is merely descriptive. It has shown separate areas as appertaining to the two Mauzas 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles being of "Babhangawan" and 267 acres 1 rood 3 poles being that of "Kedarpura Babhangawan". The Survey Maps bear date May 1843. The Survey Maps are conclusive as to their being two separate Mauzas within separate defined boundaries.

Exhibit O, dated the 31st March 1844, which gives the kefiat or history of the diluviated lands, treats "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" as two distinct Mauzas so do the Mauzawar, Mahalwar and the general registers of the Collectorate (Exhibits 14 to 18 and 63-A to 64-D) and the Land Registration Registers. The parties also seem to treat them as two distinct Mauzas: vide application for registration (Exhibit Z-70), dated 17th April, 1879, filed by the Manager, Court of Wards on behalf of some minor proprietors of Tauzi No. 3142. The demarcation proceedings (Exhibits Z-141 and Z-142) show that village "Babhangawan" contains two Tauzi Nos. 3142 and 3143. The report of the Demarcation Deputy Collector (Exhibit Z-98) of 1897 recognizes them as being two separate Mauzas. Third parties also seem to treat them as two separate Mauzas vide the zarpeshgi deeds (Exhibit Z 81) whereby one kita is given in zarpeshgi in Mauza "Babhangawan" and another Kita in Mauza "Kedarpura". The Diara Gengetic Survey of 1863-64 and the Typographical Survey of 1898-99 support the view that these are two distinct Mauzas.

Thus, it is manifest that from the earliest time, that is, from before the Permanent Settlement up to the present moment the Decennial and the Permanent Settlement, the Government Surveys referred to above and the Government records have all along treated them as two distinct Mauzas and so also the parties and the public. Therefore, it must be held that "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" are two distinct Mauzas as depicted and defined in the Revenue Survey maps of 1843-44 though they may have been differently called sometimes as "Babhangawan", sometimes "Babhangawan Kedarpura" and sometimes as "Kedarpura Babhangawan." Such prefixes and affixes are often adopted in order to fully describe and distinguish the Mauzas concerned.

The next question for determination is, with whom and how these lands were settled. It appears that Pargana Kasmar in which the big Mahal Raipatti, which at the time of the Decennial Settlement was split up into two mahals bearing the same name was originally attached to Zillah Tirhut and was transferred to the District of Saran in 1201 (1794 A. D.).

The Panjsalah Register containing the names of transferred villages shows "Babhangawan Kedarpura" in the Mahal of Ghinnu Singh as well as that of Parbhu Singh.

The thirty years' register gives the earliest history of the Settlement of Mauzas "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" from 1168 to 1197 (1761-1790). This document shows that the Kitabi of Khialir area of the two Mauzas was 3,488 bighas 14½ kathas and the then area (called in the register "present area") approximately amounted to 3488 bighas 15½ kathas. This area is mentioned against Kedarpura, and as to Babhangawan it is noted that it is included in the above area; that in the Decennial Settlement of 1197 (1790) the village of "Babhagawan" was settled along with "Kedarpura" for ten years with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh is separate shares and that their names stand recorded as proprietors with respective shares.

The kabuliyat (Exhibit L-1) executed by Parbhu Singh at the time of the Decennial Settlement of 1790 shows that "Babhangawan Kedarpura" was settled with him at an annual jama of Rs. 1,151 along with several other villages mentioned therein. The kabuliyat executed by Ghinnu Singh (Exhibit L-2) shows that "Kedarpura-Babhangawan" was settled with him at an annual jama of Rs. 561-1-2 along with other villages. The Settlement was for ten years from 1197 to 1206 Fasli. The kabuliyats, however, do not specify the quantity of lands settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh. In the petition for reduction of rent on account of diluvion, dated the 30th November 1801, Parbhu Singh stated that he had two-thirds share in the two Mauzas "Kedarpura" and "Babhangawan". In the jamabandi filed by Ghinnu Singh for 1800-01 (Exhibit Z-137) he stated, that the area of Babhangawan Kedarpura recorded in the register of 1197 as settled with him was 1163 bighas. This area will be almost one-third of the entire Kitabi area of the two Mauzas, i.e., 3488 bighas shown in the 30 years' register (Exhibit Z-75) as having been settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh. The application filed by Ghinnu Singh for reduction of rent is not on the record, but from the reports of Lachman Singh Kannongo, it is ovbious that such an application was filed by him. Dealing with these applications of Prabhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh for reduction of revenue on account of diluvion of the lands of the two Mauzas, Lachman Singh in his reports of 1817, 1819-20 and 1822 (Exhibits N-2, 75 and N-1 respectively) states that Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh had shares in the lands of the aforesaid two Mauzas in the proportion of two-thirds and one-third. Banwari Singh, son of Ghinnu Singh, in his petition to the Board of Revenue, dated the 20th February 1824 (Vide Exhibit M-1) also stated that he had "a third share of the aforesaid villages Kedarpura and Babhangawan" and the remaining two-thirds belonged to Parbhu Singh and others, and accordingly he prayed for Settlement of one-third of the accreted lands with him on payment of Government revenue. The Collector in his report of 22nd April 1824 (Exhibit M-2) mentions that one-third of the Mauzas Kedarpura and Babhangawan was settled with Ghinnu Singh and two-thirds with Parbhu Singh.

The petition (Exhibit Z-132) of Hinglaj Singh, one of the proprietors of Tauzi No. 3142, states that the proprietors of that Tauzi had one-third share in Mauza Babhangawan Kedarpura. The Settlement Register of 1249 (1841-43) (Exhibit 13) with respect to Mahal Raipatti of Ghinnu Singh shows that Babhangawan Kedarpura appertaining to his Mahal had an area of 1161 bighas 8 kathas with a jama of Rs. 1,901-12-0 as fixed in 1208 after reduction.

The Settlement Register (Exhibit T-1) of 1249 (1841-42) of Mahal Raipatti of Prabhu Singh shows that the area of Babhangawan Kedarpura settled with him was 2320 bighas 5 kathas 10 dhurs at an annual jama of Rs. 1,151 as fixed in 1205 Fasli.

The rubkar is of 1864 (Exhibits Z-159 and Z-160) say that Babhangawan and Kedarpura belong to one and the same person.

The Collector in his order, dated the 4th August 1897, in connection with the demarcation of Kedarpura and Babhangawan states upon the report of the Kanungo that village Babhangawan is contained in two Tauzi Nos. 3142 and 3143 and that there are two sets of proprietors. The several demarcation proceedings from 1896 to 1901, though they respect to a very small quantity of land which had just come out of water near the border of Madhupur, show that the proprietors of Tauzi No. 3143 had also possession of villane Babhangawan.

The aforesaid history of the Settlement of the two Mauzas shows that although the area was not specified in the kabuliyats of Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh (Exhibits L-1 and L-2) at the time of the Decennial Settlement, the land of the two Mouzas amounting to 3488 bighas was settled with them in the proportion of two-thirds and one-third and with proportionate Government revenue, that is, the area settled with Parbhu Singh was 2,321 bighas at an annual revenue of Rs. 1,151 and that settled with Ghinnu Singh 1,161 bighas at an annual revenue of Rs. 561 and that the lands of the two Mauzas fell in both the Mahals called Raipatti settled separately with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh. This has been the case of both the parties over since the Decennial and the Permanent Settlements of the Mahal with them. In the written statement this is practically admitted by the defendant and Mr. Hasan Imam has conceded that whether the villages were one or two and whether they were called Babhangawan or Kedarpura or Babhangawan Kedarpura, the lands were settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh in the aforesaid proportion. The Government records and reports also support this view. Ghinnu Singh's son Banwari Singh himself admitted that he had only one third share in the two Mauzas. The plaintiffs claim, therefore, that the entire Mauza "Babhangawan" covering the lands in dispute 771 acres odd as shown in the Revenue Survey map was exclusively settled with Ghinnu Singh is not borne out by the evidence in the case.

In support of their claim the plaintiffs rely principally upon the Mahalwar and the Mauzawar Registers read with the Revenue Survey map No. 53 of Mauza "Babhangawan." In order to appreciate this argument it is necessary to find out as to how the plaintiffs seek to connect Mauza "Babhagawan" as shown in the Revenue Survey map with their Tauzi No. 3142 and Mauza "Kedarpura" with the defendant's Tauzi No. 3143.

These Mahals were for the first time numbered in the Settlement Register prepared in 1841-42 (Exhibits 13 and T-1). Number 82 was allotted to Mahal Raipatti settled with Ghinnu Singh and No. 84 to Mahal Raipatti settled with Parbhu Singh. The entry in the register mentions the Mauza described therein as "Babhangawan-Kedarpura" as havng been allotted to both the prorietors Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh. Out of the Kitabi area of the Mauza, 2,320 bighas 5 kathas 10 dhurs was allotted to Parbhu Singh with the annual jama of Rs. 1,150 as originally settled with him. The jama of the entire Mahal was increased by Rs. 51-9-5 for the additional lands of Kasimpur settled with him in 1205. 1161 bighas

8 khutas wree allotted to Ghinnu Singh in the same Mauzas "Babhangawan Kedarpura." The jama originally fixed was reduced to Rs. 1,901-12-0 in the year 1208 Fasli on account of diluvion. This register was prepared just before the Revenue Survey of 1843-44 took place. In serial No. 21 of Mauzawar registers (Exhibits 16 and 63-B) in mahal No. 114 Mauza "Babhangawan-Kedarpura" is shown as having an area of 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles as found by survey measurement and shown in Revenue Survey map No. 53. In serial No. 22 of the Mauzawar registers in Mahal No. 116 Mauza "Babhangawan-Keadarpura" is shown as having an area of 267 acres 1 rood 3 poles as found by survey measurement and shown in Revenue Survey map No. 179 (by mistake put down 79). These registers do not show the names of the proprietors. The mutation registers (Exhibits. Z-157 and 157-A) from 1845-46 to 1849-50, however, show the names of the proprietors Ghinnu Singh and his co-sharers recorded with respect to Mahal Raipatti No. 3195 and those of the heirs of Parbhu Singh in Mahal Raipatti No. 3197; so also the general registers 64-A and 64-D prepared under sections 6 and 7 and 14 and 15 respectively of Act VII of 1876. These numbers are shown in the Mahalwar Registers (Exhibits 14 and 17) as corresponding to Nos. 114 and 116 respectively: No. 3195-114 as being the number of the Mahal Raipatti belonging to Ghinnu Singh and No. 3197-116 as being the number of the Mahal Raipati belonging to Parbhu Singh. The present Tauzi numbers of the Mahals are also given in this register, namely, Nos. 3142 corresponding to No. 3195-114 as the number of the Mahal belonging to Ghinnu Singh, Tauzi No. 3143 corresponding to No. 3196 and 116 as the number of the Mahal belonging to Parbhu Singh. "Babhangawan-Kedarpura" with an area of 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles has been shown in this Register as appertaining to Tauzi No. 3142 and "Babhangawa-Kedarpura" having an area of 267 acres 1 rood 3 poles as appertaining to Mahal No. 3143 of Parbhu Singh. Thus, the plaintiffs say that they have connected the area in dispute with Mauza "Babhangawan" as shown in Revenue Survey map No. 53 and that this appertains to their Mahal bearing Tauzi No. 3142, and that the defendants have got only an area of 267 acres 1 rood 3 poles as shewn in the Revenue Survey map No. 179 and designated as "Kedarpura" appertaining to their Mahal No. 3143. The plaintiffs' case is, therefore, based upon these registers, particularly the Mahalwar Register. Some of these registers, such as the mutation registers, are no doubt public documents prepared by the Collector in his official capacity in order to contain information with respect to the revenue paying lands and the names of the proprietors thereof and the changes and transfers that took place from time to time with respect to them. They used to be first prepared under the provisions of Regulation 48 of 1793 (vide section 16) and are now kept under Act VII of 1876. The entries in these registers are receivable in evidence quantum valebat for what they are worth. They are, however, not conclusive and may be shown to be inaccurate. Apart from the reports of Lachhman Singh Kanungo and the Collector in connection with the abatement of revenue on account of the diluvion of the lands of the two Mauzas, and the kefiyat of the diluviated lands of 1844 (Exhibit O), the Quinquennial Register of 1700—1838 and of 1834—1838 (Exhibits U and Z-140) show that the lands in both the Mauzas "Babhangawan-Kedarpura" were settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs and the defendants, with specified areas and revenue, and do not show that all the lands of Babhangawan were exclusively settled with Ghinnu Singh. These Quinquennial Registers were prepared under the direction of the Board of Revenue under Regulation 48 of 1793. They are called Quinquennial as they were originally required to be prepared every five years. The words "every five years" which occurred in section 2 of the Regulation have been repealed, but the name of the register still continues. The register is a public document and admissible in evidence as such: Sreemutty Oodoy Monee Debee v. Bishonath Dutt (1). The entries in these registers support the case of the defendants that both the Mauzas were settled with the proprietors of the two Tauzis bearing Nos. 3142 and 3143. The Settlement Registers, which are also public documents prepared in 1841-42 (Exhibits 13 and T-1) which give the Mauzas, their areas and the jama settled with Ghinnu Singh and Parbhu Singh, show that the lands of both the Mauzas "Babhangawan-Kedarpura" were settled with both of them. These are the registers previous to the Revenue Survey of 1843-44. The registers prepared subsequent to the Revenue Survey and relied upon by the plaintiffs also show both the Mauzas "Babhangawan-Kedarpura" as appertaining to the Mahals of both the proprietors Ghinnu Singh and Parbhu Singh. So far they are in agreement; but how the area of 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles, which corresponds only with one Mauza called Babhangawan in the Revenue Survey map, came to be recorded as appertaining to the Mahal of Ghinnu Singh and 267 acres 1 rood 3 poles, which corresponds only with one Mauza called "Kedarpura-Babhangawan" in the Revenue Survey map, to the Mahal of Parbhu Singh is a mystery. The Mauzawar Registers do not contain the names of the proprietors but only the serial numbers of the Mauzas in the register and the numbers of the two Mahals. The Mahalwar and the Mutation Registers, no doubt, contain the names of the proprietors. The subsequent treatment by the Revenue Authorities as well as the parties as already shown indicates the state of affairs that existed prior to the Revenue Survey continued. Therefore, if there is any conflict between the registers prepared after the Revenue Survey and those prepared before that, the latter must be accepted. The plaintiffs base their title upon the original settlement of the Mahal Babhangawan exclusively with them as shown in the Revenue Survey. The onus to prove that the entire Mauza was settled with them is upon the plaintiffs. The Thak and the Revenue Survey do not help them. In the first place, they do not show the names of the proprietors of Mauza Babhangawan and Kedarpura. They simply demarcate the boundaries of the two Mauzas and ascertain the areas comprised therein. Even if they had shown the plaintiffs to be the proprietors of these Mauzas they would have exceeded their scope and would not have been taken as evidence of title. In the case of Moizuddi Biswas v. Ishan Chandra Das Sarkar (2), it was held that an entry in a Thakbust map is not sufficient to enable a Court of fact to hold that the disputed lands were really included in an estate at the time of the Permanent Settlement. They may be good evidence as to what the boundary of a particular plot was at the time of the Permanent Settlement per Sir Comer Petheram, C. J., in the case of Syama Sunderi Dassya v. Jogobundhu Sootar (3): though at one time even this was doubted: Mohesh Chunder Sen v. Juggut Chunder Sen (4). The true scope of a Thak and a Survey map was defined in the case of Syam Lal Sahu v. Luchman Chowdhury (5). In case of Nobo Coomar Dass v. Gobind Chunder Roy (6), Field, J., pointed out that no general rule can be laid down as to the weight to be assigned to a Survey map as a piece of evidence. That learned Judge, whose knowledge of the revenue laws and regulations is beyond any question, says that a Revenue Servey in this Province was not made under any authority of any enactment of Legislature. It was a purely executive act. At the same time, the authority of the Revenue Survey has been recognized by the Legislature and is referred to in Act IX of 1847. The Survey Operations were required to be conducted with due publicity and co-operation of the parties interested in the measurement and their signatures and objections were obtained in writing. A Survey map is, therefore, good evidence of possession according to the boundary demarcated thereon and which may be taken to have been admitted by those concerned and in each case it must be decided upon the circumstances whether it raises a reasonable presumption of title. This was the view expressed in the earlier case of Kalee Chunder Sein v. Adoo Shaikh (7), and the view has now been confirmed by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Jagadindra Nath Roy v. Secretary of State for India (8), where Lord Rindslay held that the Revenue Survey maps are not conclusive and may be shown to be wrong, but in the absence of evidence to the contrary they may properly be judicially received as correct when made. The accuracy of the Revenue Survey maps is not disputed in the present case. It is not disputed that these maps have correctly demarcated the boundaries of "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura." They are further supported by the maps prepared subsequently at the Gangetic Diaria Survey of 1863-64 and the Typographical Survey of 1898-99, and the boundaries found during the Revenue Survey may be presumed to have continued. It may also be clearly presumed that these were the boundaries which existed at the time of the Permanent Settlement but they do not go further and do not show that the lands measured and included in Mauza "Babhangawan" were settled at the time of the Permanent Settlement with Ghinnu Singh or Parbhu Singh. This has to be proved by evidence aliundi. The onus of proving that the lands shown in the Survey map as "Babhangawan" were included in the Permanent Settlement of 1793, is, as observed by Lord Rindslay in the aforesaid case upon the plaintiffs, who affirm that such was the case. The plaintiffs have failed to prove that the entire Mauza "Babhangawan" was included in the Permanent Settlement made with them. The thirty years register shows, as observed above, that they were two separate and distinct Mauzas, having jointly the Kitabi area of 3488 bighas odd. The Decennial Settlement Kabuliat of the plaintiffs (Exhibit L-2) does not show that the entire Mauza "Babhangawan" was settled with Ghinnu Singh, the plaintiffs' predecessor-in-interest. It shows that "Kedarpura-Babhangawan," and not solely "Babhangawan" was settled with Ghinnu Singh. Parbhu Singh's kabuliyat (Exhibit L-1) does not show that "Kedarpura" alone was settled with him, but "Babhangawan-Kedarpura." In the light of the evidence in the case these entries in the aforesaid kabuliyats "Kedarpura-Babhangawan" and "Babhangawan-Kedarpura" mean that lands in both the Mauzas were settled with Ghinnu Singh and Parbhu Singh. The evidence in the case already discussed points to the fact, as stated in the earliest register which sets forth the state of affairs from 1861-1890, that the lands of the two Mauzas were settled in separate shares and those shares were two-thirds to Parbhu Singh and one-third to Ghinnu Singh. Ghinnu Singh had, as admitted by himself in the jamabandi filed by him and the petition filed by his son Banwari Singh, only one-third of the entire area, namely, 1,161 bighas were settled with him. Parbhu Singh, on the other hand, had about 2,321 bighas odd, that is, about two-thirds of the entire area. The jama payable by Ghinnu Singh and Parbhu Singh Rs. 56-1-2 and Rs 1,151 respectively also point to nearly the same proportion. The Revenue Survey has found the area of "Babhangawan" to be 771 acres odd and of "Kedarpura" to be 267 acres odd. If "Babhangawan" was settled entirely wth Ghinnu Singh and "Kedarpura" with Parbhu Singh, as alleged by the plaintiffs, Ghinnu Singh would then have an area of 771 acres odd and Parbhu Singh an area of 267 bighas odd as shown in the Revenue Survey maps of "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" respectively; in other words, the share of Ghinnu Singh will be two-thirds and Parbhu Singh one-third, the area of the two Mauzas taken together, that is, in inverse order of the proportion of the area which was originally settled with them.

On behalf of the plaintiffs it has been urged that the Kitabi or Khaiyali area mentioned in the earliest register (Exhibit Z-75) was a myth and that the settlement was not according to the area but was according to the produce of the land. In other words, the contention is that, although the jamas settled with Ghinnu Singh and Prabhu Singh as stated above are nearly in the proportion of one-third and two-thirds, the area in the settlement of Ghinnu Singh must have been in the inverse proportion according to the produce of the land allotted to him. It is true that, originally, during the Muhammadan period the Settlement was made according to the produce of the land and Sher Shah (1540-1545 A. D) fixed the share of the State at one-fourth of the produce. As he did not live long he could not carry out his plans into general effect and whatever he left undone was, however, effectually performed under the auspices of the Emperor Akbar (latter half of the 16th Century) by Raja Todarmal. The first step taken towards an accurate assessment was to make the measurement of the land and in order to do this one uniform standard was substituted for the various measurements used throughout the country which was 3,600 square yards for a bigha, the English statute acre being 4,840 square yards. The register prepared in the time of Hosiar Jang showed the Kitabi area which was ascertained by measurement during the time of Raja Todarmal and this area came to be known as the Kitabi area, that is, literally the area recorded in the register and was accepted for the settlement of revenue when the East India Company took the Grant of the Provinces of Bengal, Bihar and Orissa. The areas of the Mauzas were found in the old Muhammadan registers called Da'tar Purana. They were collected and compiled under the orders and superintendence of Mr. Dain in 1817 (vide Exhibit 99 para. 10 pt 3). The Settlements made during the time of the East India Company were based upon the Kitabi area found in the old Muhammadan records and such Settlements were made originally for short periods, in order to ascertain the actual produce of the lands and the burden of revenue that they were capable of bearing. After full investigation the information was set forth in the thirty years' register which gives an account of the Settlement previous to and after the assumption of the administration by the East India Company. On the basis of the information entered in the said register, the Decennial Settlement was made which was intended to be made permanent upon receipt of the orders of the Court of Directors. Therefore, although the produce of the lands was the basis of the Settlement the area of the rakba could not be lost sight of in order to make the Settlement equitable both for the Government and the zemindars. The area, therefore, recorded in the said register as Khiyali or Kitabi area cannot be said to be wholly without any basis. In that very register while showing the Kitabi area the then called the present area which was slightly in modification of the Kitabi area, was also mentioned. Therefore, the area was taken into consideration at the time of the Settlement and was always so treated in dealing with Settlement of the two Mauzas, and the proportion of two-thirds and one-third was maintained throughout by the Government Officers and was accepted by the parties themselves. Therefore, the plaintiffs have failed to show that they are entitled to the entire area measured and shown in the Revenue Survey as appertaining to Mauza Babhangawan. They have failed to show that the entire Mauza was settled with them at the time of the Decennial or the Permanent Settlement. The learned Subordinate Judge is, therefore, right in holding that only one-third of the areas of the two Mauzas "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" was settled with the plaintiffs. He has, therefore, very rightly dismissed his claim as to the entire Mauza "Babhangawan" which covers the land in dispute. The plaintiffs, however, have proved that at the time of the Decennial Settlement one-third of the area of Mauza "Babhangawan" was settled with them.

Mr. Hasan Imam, however, contends that, after the Decennial Settlement, the lands of the two Mauzas "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" settled with Paibhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh began to diluviate and by the time the ten years expired all the lands of the two Mauzas had diluviated, leaving only 33 bighas 3 kathas out of the land settled with Ghinnu Singh and 75 bighas 2 kathas out of the lands settled with Paibhu Singh out of water, and Ghinnu Singh took remission of revenue but Paibhu Singh did not, and when the lands began to re-appear Paibhu Singh and his heirs took possession of the same and in the year 1819 when all the lands of both the villages re-appeared they took possession of the entire lands. Ghinnu Singh and his heirs were never in possession of the lands after re-appearance and their various attempts to take Settlements of the lands from Government failed. Therefore, says Mr. Hasan Imam, Ghinnu Singh and his heirs lost all title to the lands in dispute. He also contends that Ghinnu Singh having taken abatement of revenue on account of diluvion the Settlement with him at the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1207 was only with respect to 33 bighas 3 kathas which remained in his possession after diluvion as stated above and the Decennial Settlement of the land in excess of the said area was superseded by the Permanent Settlement. Consequently, he argues that the lands in dispute which are the lands with respect to which the abatement of revenue was allowed to Ghinnu Singh cannot be said to be the land included in the Permanent Settlement of Ghinnu Singh. It is true, that Ghinnu Singh obtained remission of revenue, as stated above, in the year 1207. The jamabandi filed by Ghinnu Singh in 1207 for the year 1800-01 shows a decrease of 1,129 bighas 17 kathas of land settled with him in "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" with respect to which he claimed an abatement of revenue of Rs. 519-2-5, the area above water in the said villages being only 33 bighas 3 kathas. His application for abatement is not filed but is referred to in the report of Lachhman Singh Kanungo. Parbhu Singh also applied for abatement of revenue (Exhibit Z 70-71) but no abatement was allowed to him because, as reported by Lachhman Singh, there appeared sufficient increase of land according to the average jamabandi in the villages in his possession. It also appears from the reports of Lachhman Singh Kanungo (Exhibits N-2, N-1, and 75 and the note made in the Quinquennial Register of 1790 to 1838 (Exhibit U) that the lands of the Taluqa were measured under the orders of the Board of Revenue in 1208 Fasli in order to prepare an account of the diluviated lands and that the jama of the entire mahal of Ghinnu Singh of Rs. 2,405 originally fixed at the Decennial Settlement was reduced under the orders of the Governor-General in Council, dated the 6th March 1801, to Rs. 1,901. The jama of Rs. 561 odd of Mauza "Kedarpura-Babhangawan" was reduced by Rs. 347 from Rs. 561 to Rs. 213. The Tirijs, jamabandis (Exhibits P and 72) signed by Ghinun Singh and Parbhu Singh show the areas of the lands in the two Mauzas as detailed above after diluvion in their respective possession. Lachhman Singh Kanungo reported (Exhibit N-2), dated 1817, that 1,000 bighas of the lands of the two Mauzas had re-appeared and that Kanhaiya Singh and others, heirs of Parbhu Singh, had taken possession of the same and Ghinnu Singh wanted to take Settlement according to his share of one-third. In 1822 he reported that 2,000 bighas had come out and that they were fit for Settlement but that Parbhu Singh had taken possession of the same. Banwari Singh on 20th February 1824 filed a petition to the Board of Revenue which was forwarded to the Collector by his letter (Exhibit M-1) dated 5th March 1824 stating that he was entitled to Settlement of one-third of the aforesaid alluviated lands on payment of the revenue that may be assessed upon them. In reply to the Board's letter the Collector submitted his report (Exhibit M-2) dated 22nd April 1824 ,supporting the statement of Lachhman Singh as to the lands having been diluviated and being in possession of Parbhu Singh. He, however, reported that there was delay in his disposing of the matter, inasmuch as it required investigation into it which he was required to do under the orders of the Board of Revenue, dated 8th July 1822, under Regulation II of 1819 and that if the petitioner was dispossessed by the heirs of Parbhu Singh and wanted immediate redress he could go to the Zilah Court but until his investigation was brought to a determination it was not opossible for him to afford any redress to the petitioner. There is nothing on the record to show what happened afterwards, whether the petitioner Banwari Singh did go to the Civil Court or not. If he did go, what was the result. It is also not known what was the final report of the Collector after the investigation referred to in his letter. The Collector's letter is dated 22nd April 1825 and the Tirij of the diluviated lands is dated September 1830. (Exhibits P and 72).

Ghinnu Singh seems to have repeated his prayer in his application of the 3rd December 1830. Mr. Dharikshan Singh, Deputy Magistrate, in his judgment in the case under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (Exhibit Z-99) dealing with this question states: "A document of 1839 has been produced by the second party (the plaintiffs) from which it appears that under the direction of the Board of Revenue the revenue fixed in 1197 Fasli on Ghinnu Singh's share (Rs. 2,405 odd) was to be restored." This document has not been produced before us. It, however, appears that Ghinnu Singh and his heirs continued to pay the revenue as was assessed in 1208 after the diluvion of the land of the Mauza, vide Exhibit 13, Settlement Register of 1841-42. On the other hand, the revenue fixed for the lands settled with Parbhu Singh was not reduced and the reason of this is given in the report of Lachhman Singh as well as in the Quinquennial Register (Exhibit U). It appears from those documents that, between the years 1197 to 1201, Parbhu Singh took into his possession the diluviated lands of Mauza Peerbahani Chak and thus he was in possession of lands which did not decrease the jamabandi income of the lands in his possession in spite of the diluvion of the lands of Mauza "Babhangawan" "Kedarpura," and, therefore, the original revenue of his mahal of Rs. 6,953-2 was not reduced. In 1205 he took Settlement of lands in Qasimpur upon which a jama of Rs. 51-9-5 was assessed. Accordingly, the Settlement Register (Exhibit T-1) 1841-42 shows that the jama of Rs. 7,004-11-5 was fixed in 1205 for the Mahal Raipatti, Tauzi No. 3143 including Qasimpur. Therefore, no additional jama was assessed upon the lands in possession of Parbhu Singh after the diluvion of the lands of Babhangawan and Kedarpura as reported by Lachhman Singh. No additional revenue was paid by Ghinnu Singh also. Mr. Hasan Imam says that the additional lands of "Babhangawan" and "Kedarpura" of about 2,000 bighas which were taken possession by Parbhu Singh's heirs were all the lands of those Mauzas and, consequently, Parbhu Singh was in possession of all those lands to the exclusion of Ghinnu Singh's heirs, and the original Kitabi area settled with him being 2,321 bighas odd he is not in possession of any land in excess of that area and, therefore, the lands in question must be deemed to have been included in the Settlement originally made with him; but if these lands covered the entire area of Babhangawan and Kedarpura Parbhu Singh's heirs had no right to exclude Ghinnu Singh's heirs from one-third of the said area inasmuch as one-third of the entire area was settled with Ghinnu Singh at the time of the Decennial Settlement. A reference has been made to a report, dated 1819-20 (Exhibit 75) to show that the 2,000 bighas taken possession of by Parbhu Singh's heir covered the entire lands of Babhangawan and Kedarpura barring the lands of 75 bighas odd and 33 bighas odd which had not diluviated before 1201 and continued to be in possession of Parbhu Singh. This argument is based upon the boundaries of 2,000 bighas (in particular the northern boundary) of the diluviated lands given in the said report (Exhibit U) which mentions Akhilpur and Mauza Khas as being to the north of the newly formed lands. The map showing the measurements and situation of the said 2,000 bighas has not been produced. We have looked into the maps carefully of the Revenue Survey of Mauza Babhangawan Kedarpura and the adjoining villages, particularly the southern villages. The northern boundary given in the kaifiyat does not necessarily cover all the lands of Babhangawan and Kedarpura. The area 2,000 bighas in question is far in excess of the area of Babhangawan and Kedarpura found by the Revenue Survey measurement. Therefore, the aforesaid area must include the land of other Mauzas, probably to the south of Kedarpura. If so, it is not possible to say how far these lands extended to the south. Therefore, no certain inference can be drawn from the area or the boundary given in the report (Exhibit U) and it cannot with certainty be said that the diluviated lands necessarily covered the lands in dispute. Therefore, the defendants cannot derive any benefit from the fact they were in possession of 2,000 bighas of the alluviated lands in 1822. The lands of the Mauzas are subject to the action of river Ganges. In fact, the whole tract of lands in the neighbourhood has been subject to the fitful course of the river, particularly the lands to the south of Bhabhangawan and Kedarpura which are described as Chaks or Churs, terms that apply generally to diara lands. The lands of the villages in question had all diluviated between 1201 to 1207 just after the Decennial Settlement. Some lands began to appear in 1215 and the alluvion continued up to 1220 when large quantities of land re-appeared. Nothing is known as to the condition of the lands up to 1840 when the Thak and the Revenue Survey took place. There is, however, a note to the effect that it relates to the newly accreted lands of the said Mauzas. The Settlement Register (Exhibit 13) of 1249 Fasli (1841-42) does not show any decrease in the area settled with Ghinnu Singh on account of the diluvion though it shows the decrease in the annual jama payable. The area there recorded is 1161 bighas 8 kathas, that is, nearly one-third of the entire area of the two Mauzas.

The question then is whether Ghinnu Singh's taking remission of the revenue amounts to an abandonment of the lands by him. No authority exactly applicable to the present case has been cited. There are some cases relating to the effect of submersion of raiyati lands and non-payment of rent but none with respect to the effect of remission of revenue payable to Government. In Hemnath Dutt v. Ashgur Sindar (9), the view was expressed that the taking of remission of rent after submersion with respect to the diluviated lands constitute abandonment of the holding and the tenant will not be entitled to the lands on re-formation in suit; so also in Saligram Singh v. Puluk Pandey (10). This was a decision based under section 6 of Act VIII of 1869 which requires that a raiyat could retain the right of occupancy only so long as he paid rent. As to what would be the effect of abatement of rent in such circumstances under the Bengal Tenancy Act was left open. The view, however, was not accepted by the Privy Council in Arun Chandra Singh v. Kamini Kumar (11), which also was a case under the Bengal Act VIII of 1869. There it was held that the abatement in itself of rent will not entail forfeiture of the tenancy. To the same effect was the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Mazhar Rai v. Ramgat Singh (12). Therefore, so far as the tenancy land is concerned, the taking of abatemet of rent will not necessarily cause an abandonment of the lands. As to the effect of obtaining abatement of revenue there is no clear decision. On the principle enunciated in the above cases and analogy, the abatement of revenue will not cause forfeiture of the lands. The observation in the case of Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (13) may be disitinguished on the ground that, as a matter of fact, in that case there was a continued payment of rent during the submertion and hence there was no forfeiture of the lands. Similarly in Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esoff (14), it was not thought necessary to decide the question inasmuch as there was no abatement of revenue. These cases, however, lay down that the question depends upon the intention of the parties. If the circumstances indicate that, in taking abatement of the revenue, there was an intention to abandon the land, then, after re-appearance, the person who took the abatement cannot claim the land as he had already lost all right thereto. Therefore, it is to be judged in the circumstances of this case whether the plaintiffs by taking abatement of the revenue intended to abandon it. The applications of the Ghinnu Singh's heirs after re-appearance claiming one-third share in the lands as a matter of right on payment of revenue clearly indicate that there was no intention to abandon the holding, nor is there any thing on the part of the Government to indicate that the land with respect to which the abatement was allowed was treated as abandoned. The Settlement Register (Exhibit 13) already referred to, as well as other registers, continued to record the area originally settled with Ghinnu Singh as the area appertaining to the Mahal Tauzi No. 3142. When the lands re-appeared and the report was made by Lachhman Singh Kanungo in the year 1817-24 the Government did not take steps to settle the lands and assess revenue thereon.

About that time Regulation II of 1819 relating to resumption and assessment of revenue on excess lands not already settled came into operation; yet no action was taken to resume or assess the additional lands reported by Lachhman Singh. No action up till now has been taken by Government under Act IX of 1847, even after the Revenue Survey of 1843, or after the Diara Survey of 1863-64, to assess the revenue over the lands and to treat them as lands in addition to what was originally settled. It is now a settled law that Act IX of 1847 will only apply to lands which were not covered by the original Decennial and Permanent Settlements vide Secretary of State for India in Council v. Fahamidannissa Begum (15). If these lands were not included in the Permanent Settlement as is contended for by Mr. Hasan Imam, certainly Government would have taken action to treat them as additional lands liable to be settled anew. The Government did not do so. Therefore, they were treated as lands covered by the original Settlement, and hence the remission did not cause any abandonment in itself and consequently did not entail forfeiture of the lands if they were originally included in the Settlement of Ghinnu Singh. It is, however, said that the Decennial Settlement of 1793 was superseded after ten years by the Permanent Settlement, and soon after the expiry of the Decennial Settlement the remission was allowed, and only 33 bighas odd were treated as part of the lands settled with Ghinnu Singh in 1801.

The Decennial Settlement became ipso facto permanent after the expiry of the term in 1206 (1799). Sections 1 and 2 of Regulation I of 1793 declared that the Settlements made in 1790 became permanent by themselves without any further confirmation. Therefore, the Permanent Settlement does not date from the expiry of the Decennial Settlement in 1799, but from the time when the Decennial Settlement was made in 1790. The abatement was, therefore, made after the Permanent Settlement had been concluded. The abatement was, as a matter of fact, allowed in 1208 (1901). Two years after the expiry of the Decennial Settlement in 1206 (1799), the abatement was allowed under the Regulations with respect to the jama settled by the Permanent Settlement after measurement under the authority of the Board of Revenue and the Governor-General in Council. The Regulations do not say that the abatement will necessarily cause the abandonment of the land. Therefore, the abatement in the present case did not entail forfeiture of the lands settled originally with Ghinnu Singh, and the plaintiffs' title to the lands subsisted all along.

The question then arises whether their title was extinguished by loss of the possession over the lands in suit. The question of adverse possession has not been raised in this case and from the nature of the lands it is not possible to hold that the defendants were in possession of the identical lands for a continuous period of 12 years at any time when the lands were above water. The evidence of possession offered by the defendants has been disbelieved by the Court below. The demarcation proceedings of 1796-1901 indicate that very small quantity of lands, almost negligible, had come out of water and both parties were asserting their right to the lands in question. If the defendants were trespassers to the extent of one-third of the lands of the village they must prove their possession openly and exclusively and adversely to the knowledge of the plaintiffs with respect to the particular lands in question in order to acquire right by prescription. This has not been attempted to be done in this case nor is this a case of adverse possession. The entire lands of the Mauzas were again under water from 1892 to 1909 and small quantities of lands began to appear in 1909, about 100 bighas, with some negligible quantity in 1906 with respect to which the demarcation proceedings took place. But from 1909 the parties are fighting for possession and ultimately there were proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Therefore, nobody can be said to be in peaceful possession of the lands so as to acquire title by prescription as against the rightful owner. On the other hand, the plaintiffs have given evidence in the case of exercising their right of possession over such portions of the lands as come out of water. Their evidence, though it may not be sufficient for the purpose of giving them a prescriptive right, is sufficient for the purpose of preserving their right based upon their undoubted title. It is not possible to disbelieve all the evidence of possession given by the plaintiffs in the case though it may admit of some criticism. There are rent-decrees of Courts (Exhibits 25 to 32) the villages papers, etc. Considering all this evidence it cannot be said that they have not exercised right of possession which the peculiar nature of the lands in this particular case admit of. They have, therefore, subsisting right and this is sufficient for them to claim recovery of the land in question based on title. The appeal before us was argued entirely upon the footing that the case depends entirely upon title, and not on prescription, and if the plaintiffs proved the title they are entitled to succeed. This is also the view of the Court below. In the very beginning of its judgment, while discussing Issues Nos. 6 and 7, the Court below says, that "the plaintiffs will succeed if they prove title to the lands in dispute and they will fail on their failure to prove the title." The plaintiffs have, no doubt, failed to prove title to the entire Mauza Babhangawan but they have succeeded in proving their title to the one-third land of the said mauza.

Therefore, the decree of the Court below must be vacated. In lieu thereof a decree should be passed in favour of the plaintiffs declaring their title with respect to one-third of 771 acres 1 rood 37 poles shown in the Revenue Survey as Mauza "Babhangawan" barring 33 bighas 3 kathas with respect to what the Court has already given the plaintiffs a decree. The plaintiffs will be awarded possession over the aforesaid area (771 acres 2 rood 37 poles minus 33 bighas 3 kathas) with mesne profits to be determined by the lower Court from 1320 until delivery of possession of three years from this date, whichever is earlier. There will be no mesne profits with respect to 33 bighas 3 kathas which have already been declared by the Court below to be in their possession.

As the plaintiffs have succeeded to one-third of their claim, they are entitled to costs in proportion to the claim decreed throughout. The appeal and the suit are accordingly decreed to the extent indicated above.

Ross, J.—The plaintiffs are the owners of an estate, Mahal Raipatti, bearing Tauzi No. 3142 in the District of Saran, and the principal defendant is the owner of the adjoining estate, also called Mahal Raipatti, bearing Tauzi No. 3143. In the former estate there are two khatas, the ijmali khata and Khata No. 1. In 1883 the former was sold for arrears of Government revenue and was purchased by five persons whose successors-in-interests are plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 11. The Khata No. 1 was also sold for arrears of Government revenue and eventually came to the persons represented by plaintiffs Nos. 12 to 15 by private purchase from the auction-purchaser. Defendant No. 1 purchased the estate bearing Tauzi No. 3143 privately from defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who, through their farzidar Gopal Das, had purchased it at a sale for arrears of Government revenue. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 represent the lessee of the property defendants Nos. 6 to 9 belong to the family of defendant No. 1 and the remaining defendants are kastkars and tenants, except defendant No. 24, a farzidar of one of the plaintiffs, Bhagwat Singh.

The subject-matter of this litigation is 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles of land, being Mauza Babhangawan in Mahal Raipatti. The plaintiffs allege that the original number of their mahal was 82 and this subsequently became 114, 2007 and lastly 3142. The corresponding numbers of the defendants' estate were 84, 116, 2009 and 3143. In 1843 the two mahals were first measured systematically in the Revenue Survey. Mauza Babhangawan is situated within the plaintiffs' Mahal Raipatti and bears No. 53 of the Revenue Survey and another village Kedarpura Babhangawan, the Revenue Survey number of which is 179 and the area 267 acres 1 rood and 3 poles is situated in the defendants' mahals. These are two distinct Mauzas. The land being situated near the river Ganges is subject to diluvion and alluvion and on its last re-appearance from the river there was criminal litigation over it. Eventually, in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, possession was awarded to the defendants. The plaintiffs, therefore, seek a declaration of their title to this village and possession and mesne profits.

The defendant No. 1 is the contesting defendant. In the written statement it is alleged that, at the time of the Permanent Settlement of 1793, the entire Mahal Raipatti under two Tauzi numbers, namely, Nos. 3143 and 142 was settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh in the proportion of Nos. 2 to 1, the sadar jama payable by the former being Rs. 6,953 and that payable by the latter Rs. 2,405. One of the villages comprised in the mahal was Babhangawan Kedarpura and this village was settled with these two persons in the same proportion, the sadr jama of Parbhu Singh being Rs. 1,151 and that of Ghinnu Singh Rs. 561. The village was known indifferently as Babhangawan Kedarpura or Kedarpura Babhangawan or Babhangawan only. The area was 3482 bighas of which 2321 bighas went to Parbhu Singh and 1161 bighas to Ghinnu Singh. In the year 1800 the village was washed away. A measurement was made and it was found that 75 bighas remained in Parbhu Singh's share and 33 bighas and 3 kathas in Ghinnu Singh's. The sadr jama of the former was not reduced but a reduction of Rs. 347 was made in Ghinnu Singh's assessment. Since then Government Revenue on 33 bighas 3 kathas only has been paid and the plaintiffs are not entitled to more land than this. It is further pleaded that the Revenue Survey map of 1843 and the Gangetic Diara Survey map of 1864 were wrongly prepared and that the possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessors had never been according to these maps and that there is no separate village Kedarpura.

The principal issues in the case and the only issues debated in appeal are issues Nos. 6 and 7. No. 6. "Have the plaintiffs any title to the disputed land?" and No. 7, "Whether the disputed property, namely, the lands measuring 771 acres 2 roods 37 poles named as village Babhangawan appertain to the plaintiffs' Mahal Raipatti, Tauzi No. 3142 or to Mahal Raipatti, Tauzi No. 3143?" The learned Subordinate Judge decided these issues against the plaintiffs and they have, therefore, brought this appeal.

It will be convenient, in the first place, to state briefly the principal dates connected with the diluvion and alluvion of the lands in suit. From Exhibits 71, 72 and N (2) it appears that in 1794 diluvion began and by 1801 or 1802 it was complete except for 75 bighas 2 kathas in the share of Parbhu Singh and 33 bighas 3 kathas in the share of Ghinnu Singh. From Exhibit N (1) it appears that alluvion began in 1808. By 1817 there were 1000 bighas of cultivable land (Exhibit N (2) and by 1819 2000 bighas had appeared. From the Thak and Revenue Survey maps of 1843 it will be seen that all the land was above water at that time. Diluvion seems to have begun again about 1887, as appears from the evidence of defence witness Chhabila Pandey, and was complete before 1896 when re-formation began. By 1903 about 55 bighas of cultivable land and by 1912, 932 bighas had appeared (Exhibits 37 (A) and 37 (B).

The evidence may be conveniently considered in four parts—(1) down to the Parmanent Settlement; (2) from 1801 to 1842 (3) the Revenue Survey maps of 1843 and the Collector's Registers connected therewith; and (4) the documents of subsequent years.

(1) The history of this property begins with Exhibit Z (75) a thirty years khatian from 1761 to 1790 which was prepared in the year 1817. It appears from this document that the Taluka was originally called Taluka Jungle Singh. In this Taluka were three villages Raipatti, Kedarpura and Babhangawan. The recorded area of Kedarpura was 3488 bighas 14½ kathas. The area of Babhangawan is recorded as included in Kedarpura and the sadr jama of both villages is included in that of the Taluka. The sadr jama in 1789 was Rs.9,798. In 1790, when the Decennial Settlement was made, separate jamas are recorded for Raipatti Rs. 933-2-0 and for Kedarpura Rs. 1,712-1-6; while, against Babhangawan, is the note "with Kedarpura and Parbhu Singh." It appears, further, from this document that in 1776 the estate was in charge of Parbhu Singh and Shewan Singh and that at the time of the Decennial Settlement of 1790 it was settled with Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh separately according to their shares. Next come the Kabuliyats of 1790 by which Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh took Settlement of Mahal Raipatti (Exhibits L (1) and L (2)). In Parbhu Singh's Kabuliyat executed on the 16th December 1790 occurs, among sixteen villages, the name of Babhangawan Kedarpura with a sadr jama of Rs. 1,151 while in the Kabuliyat of Ghinnu Singh "respecting the share of Shewan Singh" executed on the 24th December 1790 appears, among eight villages, the name of Kedrarpura Babhangawan the sadr jama of which is ascertained from other evidence to be Rs. 561-1-10 (Exhibit O).

Exhibit Z (137) is a jamabandi for 1800 to 1801 submitted by Ghinnu Singh. This shows the area of Babhangawan Kedarpura, as recorded in the register of 1790, to be 1163 bighas of which only 33 bighas 3 kathas were in existence in the year 1800. The jama is said to have fallen from Rs. 561-1-2 to 519-2-5. On the 2nd of December 1799 Parbhu Singh also applied for reduction of his assessment (Exhibit 70) and he renewed his application in 1801 (Exhibit 71). Exhibit 72 is a document of 1830 which contains the measurements of Mauza, Raipatti and other Mauzas constituting the Taluka of Chaudhury Parbhu Singh and the Taluka of Ghinnu Singh in 1800. This is an extremely important document and it shows that in Parbhu Singh's estate there were 75 bighas and 2 kathas made up of 44 bighas 16 kathas in Babhangawan and 30 bighas and 6 kathas in Kedarpura, while, in Ghinnu Singh's estate, there were 33 bighas 3 kathas made up of 18 bighas in Babhangawan and 15 bighas 3 kathas in Kedarpura. This document shows not only the lands that remained after diluvion but also the fact that lands situated in each of the villages appertained to the estates of both Parbhu Singh and Ghinnu Singh. The Quinquennial Register from 1790 to 1848 (Exhibit U) shows that the Government revenue assessed on Ghinnu Singh's estate, which is there shown as bearing No. 82, was reduced from Rs. 2,405-1-2 to Rs. 1,901-12-1. It further shows that in 1801 under the orders of the Governor-General in Council and the authorities of the Board, dated the 6th March 1801, this remission was made and the doal of the Mahal after deducting Sikka Rs. 503-5-9 from what was settled in 1790 on account of diluvion, was written in the name of Ghinnu Singh. The register also shows the estate of Parbhu Singh as bearing No. 84 but the revenue settled in 1790 remained unchanged in his case. The same facts appear in Exhibit O, a Kaifiat of the diluviated lands, dated the 31st March 1844, with the additional fact that an Amin was sent in 1800 to measure the diluviated lands, after which the revenue of Ghinnu Singh's estate was reduced by Rs. 347-2-9 in the case of Babhangawan Kedarpura and another doal at a reduced jama was taken from him in 1801. It is further stated in this document that the jama of Parbhu Singh was slightly reduced on account of diluvion, but this statement is not supported by the other evidence in the case which is to the effect that his application for reduction was refused.

(2) Exhibit N (2) is a report of Lachhman Singh Kanungo, made in 1817 stating that Babhangawan Kedarpura had the reformed and that about 1000 bighas of land as pointed out by Ghinnu Singh was cultivable and fit for settlement by the Government, but it was in the occupation of the heirs of Parbhu Singh. Exhibit Z (140) is a further report made in 1819 which states that about 2000 bighas of land had reformed in Kedarpura and Babhangawan and that the proceeds thereof were appropriated by the heirs of Parbhu Singh; that offers of Rs. 2,000 were being made for this land and the accreted land of Kasimpur This 2000 bighas appears also in Exhibit 75, a report of alluviated lands made in 1819-1820. It is said in this document that two-thirds belong to the heirs of Parbhu Singh and one-third to Banwari Singh, heir of Ghinnu Singh, but that the heirs of Parbhu Singh are in possession of the entirety. One of the difficulties in the case is to reconcile the Kitabi area of Babhangawan Kedarpura, 3488 bighas, with the area found at the Revenue Survey which is 771 plus 267 acres. A suggestion made by the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs in connection with Exhibit 75 is that the 2000 bighas therein shown against Kedarpura Babhangawan is the total of the areas of Kashchak, Harshamchak, Bishunpur, Birbhanchak, Jafarpur Nisf, Kedarpura and the southern strip of Babhangawan. On this theory, these areas have been entered twice over in the report under different names. The large area may possibly be explained as including Kasimpur (625 bighas), Birbhanchak (181 bighas) Harshampur (204 bighas) and Bisnunpur Arjun (500 bighas) all of which were under water at the time of Decennial Settlement. These areas added to the 2,000 bighas of Babhangawan Kedarpura would make up approximately the original Kitabi area. This, however, is a matter of speculation. In 1822 the Kanungo submitted a further report (Exhibit N) in which he said that Banwari Singh was present to execute a Kabuliyat recording doal at the original jama for the alluviated land which was still to be settled. No steps were apparently taken on the Kanungo's report and in 1824 Banwari Singh presented a petition to the Government in which he alleged that one-third share in Kedarpura and Babhangawan was his property inherited from his father. With regard to the diluvion he says that 99 bighas of land remained in Babhangawan and 45 bighas in Kedarpura of which 15 bighas in Kedarpura were settled in his name and 30 bighas in the name of heirs of Parbhu Singh. He goes on to say that various applications were made for Settlement of the alluviated land and he renewed his application to the Government praying for patta for one-third on receipt of payment of the Government revenue which might be settled there on. This petition was sent by the Board of Revenue to the Collector for report. He reported the facts about the reduction of Ghinnu Singh's assessment on account of diluvion and denied that any application for Settlement had been made by Banwari Singh. The Collector's opinion was that if Banwari Singh asserted that the heirs of Parbhu Singh had dispossessed him he should go to the Civil Court. Again, in 1830 (Exhibit 72) the Kanungo suggested that one-third of the land in Kedarpura and Babhangawan should be attached and made over to Banwari Singh so that he might pay the Government revenue Rs. 500 which had been remitted when the diluvion took place. But no action seems to have been taken either by the Government to settle the alluviated land or by Banwari Singh to assert his title in the Civil Court. In Exhibit Z (139) a rubakari of the Collector made in a partition case in 1840, the statement is repeated that "after the deduction of Rs. 503-5-9 from the jama of Ghinnu Singh a doal showing the rent from 1800 in respect of the balance of the jama amounting to Rs. 1,901-12-1 was filed on behalf of the malik." Exhibit Z (135) is a report of an Amin who, in connection with certain partition proceedings had been deputed to measure Babhangawan and Kedarpura in 1841. The measurement which he proposed to make was resisted by the servants of Hingu Raj Singh, the pruchaser at auction-sale of the interest of Banwari Singh. These persons stated that the lands of Mauza Babhangawan and Kedarpura, which formed the share of Kanhaya Singh, Chakurdhari Singh and Utim Narain Singh and the share of Ghinnu Singh sold at auction, belonging to their master, had been joint and had not been partitioned and that their master ought to get 5 anas 1 pice and odd out of the Mauza as his purchased share and, therefore, the entire Mauza should be measured and one-third share separated out. This the Kanungo refused to do and he refers to the evidence given before him by the tenants of the village that the doal of the Taluka Raipatti belonging to Kanhya Singh and others had been separated from that of the Taluka belonging to Ghinnu Singh since 1790 when the land was settled and that the former share had no connection with the latter and that a piece of kasht land measuring 29 bighas 12 kathas 10 dhurs, the subject matter of the auction-sale, had for long (that is since 1790) been in possession of Ghinnu Singh. The Kanungo pointed out that the doals of the two Talukas were separate and the lands were also separate and that as he had been deputed to measure the Taluka; belonging to Ghinnu Singh only he could not agree with the proposal that he should measure the entire village. Exhibits T (1) and 13 are extracts from the Settlement Register of 1841-1842. These show one of the villages of Mahal No. 84 to be Babhangawan Kedarpura with a Kitabi area of 2,320 bighas 5 kathas and 10 dhurs and a jama of Rs. 1,151 which is said to have been sanctioned in 1205 (1798). This is the estate belonging to the defendant.

It also shows as Mahal No. 82, Babhangawan Kedarpura, whose recorded area is still given as 1,161 bighas 8 kathas. The jama is not shown against this village, but it is stated that the jama of the mahal was fixed as sanctioned in 1208 (1801). This concludes the evidence relating to the period from 1801 to 1842.

(3) The Thak map of Kedarpura is Exhibit 79 and that of Babhangawan is Exhibit S. These maps are dated, respectively, the 3rd and 5th of January 1843. Exhibit S shows that the demarcation of the boundary of the diara lands of Babhangawan was made, as pointed out by Utim Rai and Patori Pande, cultivators of the said village in the presence of the holders of the surrounding land. There are two signatures of "share-holding proprietors of Babhangawan," namely, Lachmi Narain and Gobind Singh. Lachmi Narain is a nephew of Parbhu Singh and Gobind Singh was a purchaser of interests in certain villages in Mahal Raipatti Tauzi No. 3142 but not in Mauza Babhangawan of that mahal (see Exhibits Z (136) Z (130) and Z (132). The inference to be drawn from this fact is that the Thak of Babhangawan included lands which were outside the holding of the owners of Tauzi No. 3142. The Revenue Survey maps follow and they show the areas of the two villages Babhangawan and Kedarpura Babhangawan as 771 acres 2 roods and 37 poles and 267 acres 1 rood and 3 poles respectively. The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs relies upon these maps and the learned Counsel for the defence has no criticism to offer on them. He also accepts them as correct. With these maps are connected the Collector's registers (Exhibits 16, 18, 14, 17, 63A, 63B, 64B and 64E) Exhibits 16 and 18 are Mauzawar Registers. Exhibit 16 shows Babhangawan Kedarpura with an area of 771 acres 2 roods and 37 poles recorded in statement No. 53 of the book of the Survey Office, that is, the Revenue Survey map of Babhangawan. The name of the mahal as given is Raipatti and its number is 114. Exhibit 18 is the succeeding entry in the Mauzawar register. The name of the Mauza is the same, Babhangawan Kedarpura, the area in this case 267 acres 1 rood and 3 poles, is recorded in statement No. 179 of the Book of the Survey Office, that is, the Revenue Survey map of Kedarpura Babhangawan. The number of the Mahal is No. 116. The Mahalwar Registers Exhibits 14 and 17 are in agreement with the Mauzawar Register. They further show that in the locality the lands of Babhangawan and Kedarpura are separate. Exhibits 63-A and 63-B re-produce the extracts already given in Exhibits 16 and 18. It is an unexplained fact that, whereas in the case of other villages which are common to both the estates, the Mauzawar Register gives both Mahal Nos. 114 and 116 against the names of the villages, in the case of Babhangawan Kedarpura, No. 116 only is given against the area 267 acres and the No. 114 only against the area of 771 acres. Exhibits 64-B and 64-E are also extracts from the Mauzawar Register which add nothing further. It is on these registers, together with the Revenue Survey map, that the plaintiffs' claim to the whole of Mauza Babhangawan principally depends.

(4) The evidence of the last period is of less importance. There are mutation registers, as, for example, Exhibit Z (157). These, generally speaking, are of no importance. One interesting fact is to be found from Exhibit Z (157), namely, that the right, title and interest of Banwari Singh in Babhangawan Kedarpura was sold in 1839 for Rs. 500, while in 1842 the right, title and interest of Kanhaya Singh and Utim Narain Singh in Babhangawan Kedarpura fetched Rs. 2,000. Exhibit Z (70) an application for mutation of names made in 1877 in respect of Tauzi No. 2007, that is the plaintiffs' estate, shows that the area of 8 annas share in Babhangawan Kedarpura was 16 bighas 1 katha and 1 dhur. This looks like a reproduction of the area originally settled after the first diluvion and it cannot be attributed to a further diluvion as that did not begin until 1887. The same area appears in Exhibit Z (68) a wasil baki paper, the date of which is not given but which was filed before the 30th June 1885. Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs suggests that the area given in Exhibit 70 was given under a misapprehension by the Manager of the Court of Wards who made the application for mutation. That no strong inference can be drawn from it is clear from the fact that in Exhibit 36, an application for partition made in 1880, the area of Babhangawan Kedarpura is shown as 663 bighas 13 kathas 6½ dhurs. Exhibit C is a lease of the 8-annas share of Babhangawan in Tauzi No. 3142 and other villages, executed on the 27th January 1898. The annual gross jama of the share in Babhangawan is there recorded as Rs 52-9-3. The Road Cess Returns filed on behalf of both parties do not seem to me to yeild any inference, Exhibit Z (71) the return of Tauzi No. 3142 shows the area of Babhangawan as 16 bighas 12 kathas and 12½ dhurs but this may have been after the second diluvion had taken place. Similarly, nothing can be inferred from the defendants' Road-Cess Returns In 1896 an application was made for the demarcation of Babhangawan in Tauzi No. 3142 a portion of which had re-appeared after diluvion. Exhibit Z (129) is a report of the Kanungo in this case. He says that village Babhangawan comprises two Tauzi numbers and there are two sets of proprietors both of whom have applied for demarcation. The Deputy Collector in his report to the Collector refers to the Mahalwar Registers and to the Revenue Survey maps and says that it would appear that Babhangawan, although shown in the Mahalwar Register as appertaining to Tauzi No. 3142, has apparently been demarcated as appertaining to Tauzi No. 3143 without any objection and the proceedings have been confirmed without any objection from the proprietors of the adjacent estates.

The other documents are not of much importance. There are some rent decrees filed by the plaintiffs but as the areas included in these decrees amount to less than 33| bighas they are not inconsistent with the case of the defence. There are also a number of zarpeshgi leases from 1877 to 1891 filed by the defence. These are all produced for the same purpose, namely, to show that they deal with lands described as lying in Mauza Babhangawan within the defendants' Tauzi No. 2009 or 3143 as the case may be. This completes the principal documentary evidence. The oral evidence is of little importance. On the plaintiffs' side it is directed to prove that they have been in possession within 12 years of the date of suit. The only comment that the learned Counsel for the defendants had to make on this evidence was that, even if possession was proved, it would be of no assistance to the plaintiffs if their title was not established. Neither party has pleaded title by adverse possession, the case of the defendants' being that they hold by superior title, namely, Settlement from the Government. In paragraph 15 of the written statement it is said that the defendants are entitled to retain possession of the same quantity and the same land that had been settled with Parbhu Singh; the land in dispute forms part of the land settled and owned in Mauza Babhangawan, Tauzi No. 3143.

The main contention on this evidence by the respondents is, that the Permanent Settlement with Ghinnu Singh was made in 1801 and was in respect of only 33 bighas 3 kathas in Babhangawan Kedarpura. Learned Counsel argues that Regulation I of 1793 did not of its own force convert the Decennial into a Parmanent Settlement and that the Regulation must be read with Regulation VIII of 1793 one of the provisions of which relates to reduction in assessment. He contends that the Settlement with Ghinnu Singh made in 1790 became parmanent subject to any alteration made by reduction in the assessment and as the jama was finally settled at a reduced rate in respect of reduced area in 1208 (1801) it must be taken that this was the Settlement which was made parmanent. But the learned Counsel for the appellants points out that the Decennial Settlement expired in 1206 and that the diluvion took place after this and that the Settlement became permanent at least from 1207, whereas, the reduction in the assessment did not take place until 1208, that is, after the Settlement became permanent. This contention is sound as far as it goes. But in my opinion the effect of Regulation I of 1793 was to convert the then Current Decennial Settlement into a Permanent Settlement subject to the possibility of reduction in the assessment. The question still remains as to what the effect of the remission of revenue was. The law on the subject is contained in Mazhar Rai v. Ramgat Singh (12) and Arun Chandra Singh v. Kamini Kumar (11), which establish this, that mere non-payment of rent or claiming or accepting remission of rent is not in itself proof of abandonment and that, until it can be established that the holder of the tenure has abandoned his right to the submerged lands, it remains intact. The question is one of intention to be determined by the circumstances of each case. Now, in the present case the Government does not claim the land as having been abandoned nor does the defendant claim that the land was abandoned by Ghinnu Singh and settled with him. Therefore, it is reasonably certain that there is no case of abandonment arising in the circumstances of the present suit. Moreover, I consider it fairly clear from the terms of the various reports of Lachhman Singh Kanungo and from the petition of Banwari Singh that, so far as Ghinnu Singh and his immediate successor were concerned, there was no intention to abandon the land; but, on the contrary, an assertion of a continuing title to one-third of the village. Nor did the Government ever treat the land as abandoned. It was never settled with any one else. In Exhibit 13 the area of the plaintiffs' estate in Babhangawan Kedarpura is still shown as 1,161 bighas although the jama is said to have been settled in 1208 that is, the reduced jama. And all the Government Registers which have been referred to above show that not only one-third but the entirety of Babhangawan was treated as the plaintiffs' estate. It is clear, therefore, on the documents, that the plaintiffs have title to one-third of Babhangawan. But their claim to the whole village cannot succeed. None of the earlier documents supports it; on the contrary, they contradict it. They show clearly (a) that Ghinnu Singh had land not exclusively in Babhangawan but in Babhangawan and Kedarpura; (b) that Parbhu Singh had land not exclusively in Kedarpura but in Kedarpura and Babhangawan, and (c) that the shares of Ghinnu Singh and Parbhu Singh in the lands of both villages were one-third and two-thirds. The present litigation is confined to Babhangawan alone and, therefore, no question of the plaintiffs' right in Kedarpura arises. But the claim to the whole of Babhangawan rests ultimately on the Mauzawar Registers alone. These are wholly unexplained. They are inconsistent with all the earlier history and evidence in the case and cannot be accepted as good evidence of plaintiffs' title to the entirety of Babhangawan.

One more argument on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants remains to be considered. Reference was made to the case of Khemesh Chandra Rakshit v. Abdul Hamid (16), and it was contended that, no matter to whom the land in suit belonged, the estate defaulted and the plaintiffs purchased it and became the Settlement-holders from the Government in respect of that property. The plaintiffs, it is argued, are not the successors-in-interest of the defaulting proprietors but the purchasers of the estate shown in the Collector's Register. A sufficient answer to this argument is to be found in the fact that plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 11 purchased the ijmali account subject to encumbrances and that the other plaintiffs purchased Khata No. 1 also subject to enumbrances. What passed to the purchaser was not the estate but the right, title and interest of the defaulting proprietors. The plaintiffs' title, therefore, cannot be improved by the fact that they purchased at revenue-sale.

The result is that the appeal will be decreed in part in the terms proposed by my learned brother.

RAMBHANJAN SINGH—PLAINTIFF AND Musammat DHAKO KOER AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55 (1) (g)—Vendor of lease-hold—Liability to pay rent up to date of sale.

PHUL KUER v. RAMBHANJAN SINGH.

A vendor of lease-hold property is bound under section 55 (1) (g) of the Transfer of Property Act to pay the rent accrued due up to the date of sale where the rent became due during the tenancy of the vendor or of a person through whom he claimed otherwise than by purchase.

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 21st June 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, Aurangabad dated the 30th September 1920.

Mr. L. N. Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Brij Keshore Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 1 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Gaya reversing the decision of the Munsif of Aurangabad and decreeing the plaintiff's suit.

Rani Chandradeo Kuar was the proprietor of Mauza Kesour, she leased the property in zurpeshgi to Lohari Mal who died leaving a widow, Musammat Dhako Kuar defendant No. 2, a daughter Musammat Phul Kuar, defendant No. 1, and two sons Chuni Lal and Muni Lal, defendants Nos. 3 and 4. Dhako Kuar made a gift of 8-annas share in the zarpeshgi lease to defendant No. 1 and of other 8-annas share to defendants Nos. 3 and 4 at some time not specified. On the 7th December 1916, corresponding to Aghan 1324, defendant No. 1 sold her 8-annas interest to the plaintiff. Thereafter, Rani Chandradeo Kuar brought a suit for arrears of rent for the years 1322 and 1323, impleading as defendant only Musammat Dhako Kuar. There was an attachment before judgment of the landlord's portion of the standing crop and in order to release the crop from attachment the plaintiff paid Rs. 511-4-6 to the Rani on the 23rd January 1917. The present suit was brought against the defendant No. 1 for the recovery of this sum with interest. The Munsif dismissed the suit on this ground among others that there was no allegation in the plaint and no evidence on the plaintiff's side, that the defendant No. 1 was in possession of the lease-hold in the years 1322 and 1323 for the rent of which the suit was brought by Rani Chandradeo Kuar. His decision was reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge, and the only ground taken in second appeal is that, in the absence of any allegation or proof that defendant No. 1 was in possession of the lease-hold in 1322, and 1323 and, therefore, liable for the rent of these years, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover from her.

The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon the provisions of section 55 (1) (g) of the Transfer of Property Act which requires the seller to pay all public charges and rent accrued due in respect of the property up to the date of sale, the interest on all incumbrances on such property due on such date, and, except where the property is sold subject to incumbrances, to discharge all incumbrances on the property then existing. He infers from this provision that defendant No. 1 was bound to pay the arrears of rent due up to the end of 1323 irrespective of the period of her actual possession. This provision of the Transfer of Property Act implies a covenant against incumbrances and the question for decision is, whether the covenant extends only to such incumbrances as have been created by the vendor or to all incumbrances on the property at the time of sale. It is only on the later interpretation that the plaintiff can succeed, because there is nothing to show how long the defendant No. 1 was the owner of the property or how much rent, if any, accrued due during the period of her ownership.

The defendant No. 1 obtained the property by gift from her mother Dhako, who in turn inherited it from her husband Lahori Mal. The rent certainly accrued due during the tenancy of one or other of these persons. The incumbrance, therefore, was created either by the plaintiff's vendor or by a person through whom she claimed otherwise than by purchase. Even if the covenant against incumbrances implied by section 55 (1) (g) of the Transfer of Property Act were limited to the usual conveyancing covenant implied in the Conveyancing Act (44 & 45 Vict. Ch. I). Section 7 (1) and the actual words of the section seem to be wider than this—it must, in any view, cover this charge for rent. The decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is, therefore, correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Das, J.—I agree.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

Present:—Sir Walter Schwabe, Kt., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter and Mr. Justice Krishnan.

In the matter of MR. JOSYULA RAMACHANDRA RAO, SECOND GRADE PLEADER, RAMACHANDRAPUR.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13—Pleader instigating people not to pay taxes and avoid Courts—Misconduct—Disciplinary jurisdiction, exercise of.

A legal practitioner who instigates people not to pay taxes to the Government and to eschew the established Courts of the land is not, so long as he continues to profess and preach those views, a fit person to be entrusted with a part of the administration of justice in the Courts and his conduct is such as calls upon the High Court in the exercise of its disciplinary powers to take action against him under section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

Per Coutts Trotter, J.—The last thing the Courts should consider themselves concerned with in the ordinary way is what the political opinions of anybody are, whether they are members of the legal or any other profession. But while the Courts will always uphold the liberty of the subject in thought or speech, a Pleader who comes to ask for the issue or renewal of a sanad, is applying to be treated as a part of the machinery for the maintenance of law and order in the body politic and to take an active part in administering for the other objects of the Crown the benefits that may be supposed to result from the upkeep of law and order. It is intolerable and illogical that a man should seek to be put in that position while at the same time he is saying that law and order should be disobeyed, that taxes are not to be paid and that public offices are to be abandoned in order to paralyse the very life of the body politic. [p. 978, col. 1.]

The District Judge of Godavari having brought to the notice of the High Court in his letter, dated 1st January 1923, that Mr. Josyula Ramachandra Rao, Second Grade Pleader, Ramachandrapur, was committed to prison by the Deputy Magistrate of Peddapur to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of one year, in Miscellaneous Case No. 2 of 1922 on his file, for default in complying with an order by the Deputy Magistrate under section 108 (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure the High Court has directed issue of notice to the Pleader under section 13 (f) of the Legal Practitioners Act to show cause why he should not be dealt with under the disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Vakils Association.

JUDGMENT.

Schwabe, C. J.—In this case a Second Grade Pleader, Josyula Ramachandra Rao, has applied for a renewal of his certificate. The facts stated to us by the District Judge are, that he was convicted for refusing to give security he having been called upon to do so by reason of two speeches said to have been delivered by him in the Godavari District at meetings held about the 5th of April 1921 and on the 28th of January 1922. The effect of these speeches, as proved in evidence—shorthand notes being produced by the Police Officials who heard them—was instigating the people, among other things, not to pay taxes, and in one case not to pay taxes till there had been a meeting of the Congress, the decision of which the respondent apparently advised should guide the population as to whether they should or should not pay taxes to the recognised authorities. It was also alleged that he stated that he objected to the English Courts and the methods of English Courts and recommended the people to eschew those Courts or to go to the Courts set up or to be set up by the said Congress.

It is quite clear that, so long as a man professes views of that kind, and advises the people to act in that way, he is not a fit person to be entrusted with a part of the administration of justice in the existing Courts of this country, and I am quite clear that the making of these speeches is such conduct as calls upon the Court in the exercise of its disciplinary powers to take action.

Mr. Ramachandra Rao comes up before us and puts in a statement denying the accuracy of the reports of the speeches. His denial, however, does not go very far, nor do I think that we can disregard the evidence that was given and accepted in the Court before which the matter came. He expresses no regret for the tone of his speeches and he does not say that he has seen the error of his ways, or that he promises in future, if permitted to practise in the Courts, to conduct himself as a loyal adherent of the Government responsible for those Courts or anything of that kind; and we can only say that, as long as his attitude remains as it is, we cannot permit a sanad to be issued to him. It will be open to him on some future occasion, if he is so minded, to attempt to satisfy the Court of a genuine change in the attitude that he has at present adopted and to ask the Court to take a different view hereafter. Of course, nothing that we can say now will in any way fetter the Court which is to deal with such an application if and when it is made.

Coutts Trotter, J.—I am of the same opinion. I want to make it as clear as I can that, speaking for myself, the last thing that I think that we should consider ourselves concerned with in the ordinary way is what the political opinions of anybody are, whether they are members of the legal or any other profession. But while the Courts will always uphold the liberty of the subject in thought or speech, an applicant, who comes to ask for the issue or renewal of a sanad, is applying to be treated as a part of the machinery for the maintenance of law and order in the body politic and to take an active part in administering for the other subjects of the Crown the benefits that may be supposed to result from the upkeep of law and order. It is intolerable and illogical that a man should seek to be put in that position while at the same time he is saying that law and order should be disobeyed, that taxes are not to be paid and that public offices are to be abandoned in order to paralyse the very life of the body politic. I feel assured that this Court could not, without stultifying itself, issue a certificate to a man who with the same breath that he is asking for it cuts himself off and announces his intention to do his best to cut off others from the life of the State.

Krishnan, J.—I entirely agree with the judgments that have been just delivered by the learned Chief Justice and my learned brother Coutts Trotter. I think it is perfectly clear that, so long as the applicant is in the frame of mind which is evidenced by his two speeches Exhibits A and B, it is not possible to give him a sanad to practise in Courts. When he changes that frame of mind effectively and makes it clear to this Court that he has done so in a manner which we could rely upon it would be then time to consider whether his sanad should be renewed. For the present I agree that our order should be that his sanad should not be renewed.

Mr. Wasi Hasan, for Alam Ali.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order passed by the learned District Magistrate of Sultanpur, under section 437 of the Criminal Procedure Code directing a Subordinate Magistrate to hold further inquiry into the case of the applicants who were discharged by that Magistrate. The applicants Haider Khan, Ali Husain and Zahur-ud-din, were tried on charges under sections 471 and 193, Indian Penal Code, for offences committed in a Revenue Court. Sanction had been given by the Revenue Court for their prosecution. Zahur-uddin was owner of two plots of land which he first mortgaged to Wahid Ali and then sold to Ali Husain. Wahid Ali was redeemed by Ali Husain. The complainant Alam Ali pre-empted the sale. The case for the prosecution was that, in order to defeat the pre-emption decree, the three accused persons entered into a conspiracy and Ali Husain leased the plots to Haider Khan. The lease was alleged to be a forgery perpetrated by means of ante-dating the document. It is argued here that the learned District Magistrate did not make a proper use of his discretion in ordering further inquiry. Reference was made to the pronouncement of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Queen-Empress v. Chotu (1) that Magistrates should use the powers conferred by section 437 sparingly and with great caution and circumspection, specially in cases where questions involved are mere matters of fact. The learned Counsel argued further that the same consideration should apply as would apply in reference to appeals to this Court from acquittals. Applying these principles, I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate has given sufficient reasons for passing the order which he did. It was held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Hari Dass Sanyal v. Sarltulla (2) that a Magistrate has jurisdiction to order a further inquiry upon the same materials which were before the Subordinate Magistrate. This view was followed by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Queen-Empress v. Balasinnatambi (3). In the present case the learned Magistrate has given seven reasons why he considered the inquiry made by the Subordinate Magistrate to be unsatisfactory. The Trial Court has omitted to consider these points and the lower Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that the discharge was improper in consequence. The lower Court has also suggested the directions in which further inquiry is desirable. I am satisfied that the reasons given by the lower Court for further inquiry are valid and refuse to consider the facts of the case at this stage of the proceedings.

I dismiss the application and direct that if any stay order has been issued to the Subordinate Court it shall be withdrawn.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 106, 107, 406—Order under section 106—Order under s 107—Appeal.

Orders under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, directing security for good behaviour to be given can be appealed from under section 406 of the Code, but no appeal lies in proceedings instituted under section 107 for keeping the peace read with section 118 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Wardha, in Criminal Case No. 25 of 1923, dated the 7th May 1923.

Mr. J. K. R. Cama, K. B., for the Applicants.

ORDER.—The two applicants, Shamrao and Pandurang, have been bound over by the Sub Divisional Magistrate, Wardha, under section 107, Criminal Procedure Code, to keep the peace for a period of one year and have been ordered to execute a bond each for Rs. 250. The applicants hold a small share in Mouza Agargaon. One Musammat Kantikabai, the mother in-law of one Gulabrao, holds a 9-annas 6-pies proprietary share in the village. Gulabrao acts as agent of the lady and manages her estate and is the lambardar gumashta and mukaddam of the village. The Magistrate finds that there is bitter enmity between the two applicants and Gulabrao. There are two factions in the village and the applicants are trying to collect a share in the cowdung on the village Gothan and also to take metal from a stone quarry in a field belonging to the whole proprietary body. Gulabrao objects and the Magistrate thinks that the disputes between the parties are likely to cause a breach of the peace. He has, therefore, passed the order mentioned at the commencement of this order.

After that order was passed, an appeal was admitted in the Court of the District Magistrate, Wardha, and against the District Magistrate's order refusing to interfere the applicants have filed this application for revision. I treat this application as one for revision of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's order because, as I shall presently show, the order of the District Magistrate is ultra vires.

It is admitted in this Court that, on the evidence on record and the admissions of the two applicants, the Magistrate was justified in binding them over to keep the peace. What applicants really object to is that their opponents in a sister case have been discharged and what they want this Court to do is to cancel that order and bind their opponents also over to keep the peace. This obviously is impossible in the present case. It is not for me to suggest what remedy applicants have in the other case but there is no doubt the Magistrate's order as regards them is correct and I confirm it and dismiss this application for revision.

The Criminal Procedure Code makes a careful distinction between an order directing security to be given for keeping the peace and an order directing security to be given for good behaviour. Orders under the section directing security for good behaviour to be given can be appealed from under section 406, Criminal Procedure Code, while no appeal will lie in proceedings instituted under section 107 for keeping the peace read with section 118, Criminal Procedure Code. The District Magistrate should not, therefore, have entertained the appeal nor disposed of it.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 537, scope and applicability of—Criminal trial—Procedure prescribed by Statute not followed—Cross-cases—Prosecution witnesses in each case treated as defence witnesses in the other, legality of—Consent of accused, effect of.

The consent of the accused or his Counsel cannot validate a course of procedure which the law does not authorise. [p. 982, col. 1.]

In all penal matters the utmost strictness as to procedure must be observed. Where the mode in which a criminal trial is to be conducted is regulated by Statute, a departure from the authorised procedure can itself only be sanctioned by a statutory provision. [p. 983, col. 1.]

Section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to an infringement of a statutory requirement. It only applies to errors, omissions, or irregularities of a formal and technical nature which may occur by accident or oversight, and does not cover a substantial departure from the mode of conducting criminal trials laid down by law. In two cross-cases which arose out of the same occurrence and were being separately tried by a Sessions Judge, the evidence of the prosecution witnesses in each case, which included the depositions of the accused in the cross-case, was, at the request of the accused, treated as defence evidence in the cross-case:

Held, (1) that this mode of recording defence evidence was hopelessly and entirely illegal inasmuch as:—

(a) it resulted substantially in the accused in both cases being tried jointly, which was illegal;

(b) the evidence of each accused person as prosecution witness in the cross-case was treated as defence evidence in his own case and the case of his co-accused, which was not permissible under the law, and

(c) as the evidence which was treated as defence evidence in each case had not been recorded in the presence of all the accused in that case; [p. 983, col. 1.]

(2) that the consent of the accused did not cure the illegality: [p. 983, col. 1.]

(3) that the case was not covered by the provisions of section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code; [p. 983, col. 1.]

(4) that the trial must be set aside and new trials ordered. [p. 983, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Montgomery, dated the 20th January 1923.

Mr. Abdul Aziz and Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, for the Appellants.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, (Public Prosecutor), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Fforde, J.—Two sets of appeals are before us one on behalf of Allu and six other persons, and the other on behalf of three persons Saadullah, Agra and Ibrahim from the convictions and sentences of the Sessions Judge of Montgomery at Lahore under sections 302 and 147, Indian Penal Code, in cross-cases of riot.

We have been asked to hear the two sets of appeals together but at the opening of the case Counsel for both sets of appellants have raised the preliminary objection that the trials out of which these appeals have arisen have been conducted in a manner which is not in accordance with law. Before going into the merits of the case we, therefore, have to consider whether or not this objection is well founded and, if so, what course we should take in regard to the convictions and sentences of the Trial Court.

The facts of the case are briefly these:—

On the 16th July 1922 a serious fight took place between two parties of Muhammadan Jats, the Wahniwals and the Baghelas, resulting in the death of one person and injuries to several others. Of the Wahniwal faction seven persons, namely, Allu, Naman, Alia, Garu Farid Basra and Gahru, and of the Baghela faction four persons, namely, Hasta, Saadullah, Agra and Ibrahim have been brought to trial. With the exception of Hasta all have been convicted. Allu and Farid have been sentenced to death under section 302 of the Indian Penal Code and the remainder have been sentenced under section 147, Indian Penal Code, to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. The mode in which the trials were conducted was as follows:—

The trial of Allu's party before the Sessions Judge commenced on the 16th January 1923. Witnesses for the prosecution were examined on the 16th, 17th and 18th, two of these witnesses, namely, Agra and Hasta, being persons returned for trial in the cross-case.

On the 18th January, at the conclusion of the prosecution case, Alu was asked by the Sessions Judge whether he wished to produce any evidence in defence to which he replied:

"I give up my defence witnesses in this case but I want the prosecution witnesses in the cross-case to be treated as defence witnesses in this case."

The same question was put to each of the remaining accused of the Allu faction and the reply to this question in each case was, "I say the same as Allu."

Counsel for the seven accused addressing the Court then said, "I close my case and do not call any defence witnesses in this case. But I would like the prosecution witnesses in the cross-case to be treated as defence witnesses in this case. I would also ask that the assessors should not give their opinion in this case until they have heard the cross-case."

Having arrived at this stage on the 18th January, the Sessions Judge then proceeded on the same day to take the evidence in the case of Hasta and others. As in the previous case witnesses for the prosecution only were called consisting of the seven already tried and some twelve others who were not among the accused of either party. These witnesses were all examined on the one day, viz., the 18th January, and at the close of the evidence for the prosecution, the Sessions Judge asked Hasta if he had any defence witnesses. The answer was: "No except that I want the evidence of Waryam, Sadara and Balanda, prosecution witnesses in the cross-case, to be treated as defence-witnesses in this case." Each of the remaining three prisoners on being asked the same question replied: "No, I say the same as Hasta". No statement was made by Counsel for the accused such as was made in the former case and the defence was tacitly closed. It is important to note that, of the three witnesses referred to by Hasta, only the first two had actually given evidence; the third Balanda not having been examined at all.

Nothing further in the way of examining witnesses or recording evidence was done in either of the cases but on the following day, the 19th January, speeches by Counsel for the prosecution and for the defence were delivered in both the cases. At the conclusion of the addresses by Counsel the assessors were asked by the Court to give their opinion as regards the innocence or guilt of all the accused and their opinion were recorded on the 19th. On the 20th January the judgment of the Court was delivered and sentences passed.

Now, it is quite obvious to any one with any practical knowledge of the mode in which a criminal trial should be conducted that the procedure adopted in these cases was a serious departure from the usual and proper course. The fact that prisoners and their Counsel have consented to this course being adopted cannot give it a legal sanction, for it is a well established principle of ciminal law that a prisoner can consent to nothing which is not authorised by law. Nor can the consent of Counsel for an accused person validate a course of procedure which the law does not authorize.

It is urged by Counsel for the Crown that, although the procedure adopted in these cases was irregular, such an irregularity is covered by section 537 (a) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, which provides that "no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Chapter XXVII or on appeal or revision on account of any error, omission or irregularity in the complaint, summons, warrant, charge, proclamation, order, judgment or other proceedings before or during trial, or in any inquiry or other proceedings under this Code" unless such error, omission or irregularity has in fact occasioned or failure of justice. In my opinion this contention is not sustainable. This section only applies to errors, omissions or irregularities of a formal nature, and does not cover a substantial departure from the mode of conducting criminal trials laid down by law. This seems to be clear from the illustration given at the foot of the section, which shows the class of irregularity contemplated.

In my opinion the procedure adopted in the cases before us is wholly unauthorized by law in several particulars. In the first place, though the two sets of accused were intended to have been tried separately—as in law they were bound to be—the mode in which they were actually tried was in substance a joint trial. Only prosecution evidence appears on each record; speeches of Counsel were reserved till the close of both cases, the assessors were not asked to give their findings until both cases had been closed, and only one set of findings was recorded in respect of both and, finally, one composite judgment was delivered. In fact the first two paragraphs of the judgment show conclusively that the whole matter was in substance dealt with as a single trial.

A still graver objection to the mode in which these cases were dealt with by the Trial Court lies in the manner in which the Court dealt with the evidence for the defence. In the case of Allu and others, the Court acquiesced in the request by the prisoners on trial that witnesses who had not yet given evidence, but who were to be examined as witnesses for the prosecution in the cross-case, should be treated as witnesses for the defence in the case at hearing. If this request had in fact been given effect to, the result would have been that the evidence of each prisoner, and of each of his co-accused would have appeared subsequently on the record as evidence in his defence. In other words, each of a number of prisoners jointly tried would have been treated as a competent witness for his co-accused and also as a competent witness on his own behalf. Moreover, the only way in which the evidence could legally be given—assuming the witnesses to be competent—would be to put each witness in the box and examine him orally at the close of the prosecution case. This, needless to say, was not done. What was in fact done was to take the written record of the prosecution evidence in Hasta's case and treat it without further formality as evidence for the defence in Allu's case after both cases had been concluded. In the case of Hasta and his co-accused, the matter was somewhat different. Here the accused asked that three specific persons, Waryam, Sadara and Balanda, who were described as prosecution witnesses in Allu's case, should be treated as defence witnesses for Hasta and his fellow prisoners. That is to say, the statements given in evidence by Waryam, Sadara and Balanda for the Crown at the prosecution of Allu and others, were without any further formality to be regarded as evidence duly recorded on behalf of Hasta and his co-accused, not only is such a method of recording evidence hopelessly and entirely illegal, but in fact it resulted in one witness for the defence in the Hasta case being omitted altogether, as Balanda did not appear as a witness at all at any stage of the proceedings.

A further objection to the method adopted for dealing with defence evidence, is this:—Such evidence, apart from all other infirmities, would be evidence given in the absence of the accused. This is in violation of the provisions of section 353 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and is, therefore, not only irregular but illegal.

It is unnecessary to multiply reasons why the various infringements of the law governing criminal trials which have occurred in these cases should not be countenanced.

In all penal matters the utmost strictness in procedure must be observed. Where the mode in which a criminal trial is to be conducted is, as it is in India, regulated by Statute, a departure from the authorized procedure can itself only be sanctioned by a statutory provision. There is no such sanction for any of the illegalities which have taken place in the course of the trial of these two cases. Section 537 of the Code of Criminal Procedure does not apply to an infringement of statutory requirement. It only applies to errors, omissions and irregularities of a technical nature which may occur by accident or oversight in the course of proceedings conducted in the mode prescribed by Statute. To use the words of the Lord Chancellor in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Subrahmania Ayyar v. King Emperor (1): "These trials were prohibited in the mode in which they were conducted" and were, therefore, illegal.

For the reasons given above I am of opinion that these appeals must be accepted and that the conviction and sentences of the Court below should be set aside, and new trial ordered.

Broadway, J.—I concur in the proposed order. The appeals are accepted, the conviction and sentences are set aside and the cases are returned to the Court of Session to be re-tried in accordance with law.

To justify an order for security under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, there must be an express finding to the effect that the act involves a breach of the peace or an evident intention of committing the same, or the evidence must be so clear as to satisfy the Court (without an express finding) that such was the case. [p. 984, col. 1.]

The word "involve" in section 106 of the Code connotes the inclusion not only of a necessary but also of a probable feature, circumstance, antecedent condition or consequence. [p. 984, col. 2.]

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Applicants.

Mr. G. P. Dick, for the Crown.

ORDER.—In this case the applicants have been convicted under section 323, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 100 each and in default rigorous imprisonment for six months and in addition to execute bonds to keep the peace for one year. No arguments are raised against the conviction but it is contended that the sentences are too severe and that the order for security for keeping the peace, under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, is illegal in the case of a conviction under section 323, Indian Penal Code.

So far as the sentences are concerned, the learned Magistrate has given his reasons, viz., that the assault arose from a caste dispute which is still alive, and was a wanton one, for inflicting a heavy sentence, and I see no reason for interference in revision.

As regards the order for security under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, the applicants rely on the case of Queen v. Kunhiya (1) in which it was held that security cannot be ordered when the conviction is only for grievous hurt. It has been held by the Calcutta High Court in Jib Lal Gir v. Jogmohan Gir (2), that to justify an order for security under section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, there must be an express finding to the effect that the act involved a breach of the peace or an evident intention of committing the same, or the evidence must be so clear as to satisfy the Court (without an express finding) that such was the case. That was a case under sections 143 and 379, Indian Penal Code.

In Baidya Nath Majumdar v. Nibaran Chunder Gope (3) it was held that where the offences of which a person is convicted do not in themselves, and apart from any other incidents, come within the terms of section 106 of the Criminal Procedure Code, it is incumbent upon the Magistrate to record a clear finding with respect to the facts which, in his opinion, make the provisions of that section applicable.

This case was dissented from by the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Manik Rai (4) in which it was held that the word 'involve' in section 106, Criminal Procedure Code, connotes the inclusion not only of a necessary but also of a probable feature, circumstance, antecedent condition or consequence. In the present case the complainant was assaulted by one of the accused at the instigation of the others in the street without his being given any provocation and I think the Magistrate was right in holding that their conduct was likely to cause a breach of the peace. I, therefore, dismiss the application.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859 as amended by Act XII of 1920), s. 2, enquiry under—Transfer—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 4, 6, 526.

An enquiry by a Magistrate under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act against a labourer is an enquiry by a Magistrate or a Criminal Court within the meaning of section 6 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and as such is subject to the operation of section 526 of that Code, even though the object of the enquiry is merely to issue coercive orders, and if necessary, to enforce the same by a sentence of imprisonment. [p. 985, col. 1.]

The definition of enquiry given in section 4 clause (k) of the Criminal Procedure Code is not exhaustive. Any enquiry by a Magistrate or a Criminal Court subordinate to the High Court can be the subject-matter of a transfer by the High Court. [p. 985, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for the transfer of a proceeding pending against certain labourers under section 2 of the Workman's Breach of Contract

MANIKONDA LINGAYYA, In re.

Act (XIII of 1859), as amended by Act XII of 1920. The employer is a resident of Moradabad and carries on a stone ballast business in Shankergarh in the District of Allahabad. He advanced money to certain labourers and employed them for the purpose of working at Shankergarh. His complaint was that after working for a little while they disappeared. That complaint is being enquired into by one of the Magistrates at Moradabad. The labourers are resident of Shankergarh and desire that the complaint should be enquired into in the District of Allahabad where the alleged breach of contract is said to have taken place. It is admitted that the advances were made at Shankergarh and that, if any breach of contract took place, it must have taken place at Shankergarh too. The witnesses are all said to belong to the same place. It is, therefore, conducive to the convenience of the parties, if the case is enquired into at Allahabad. It is urged on behalf of the employer that the Workman's Breach of Contract Act intends that such enquiry should be made at the place where the master or employer resides and carries on business. The Act does not, however, lay down the procedure which is to regulate such an enquiry. It is an enquiry by a Magistrate or a Criminal Court within the meaning of section 6 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and, although the object of the enquiry is merely to issue coercive orders, and, if necessary, to enforce the same by a sentence of imprisonment, there is nothing to show that such an enquiry is excluded from the operation of section 526 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The definition of "enquiry" given in section 4, clause (k), which includes every enquiry other than a trial conducted under the Code of Criminal Procedure by a Magistrate or a Court, is not exhaustive so as to exclude an enquiry under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act of the nature above referred to. Any enquiry by a Magistrate or a Criminal Court subordinate to this Court can, therefore, be transferred under section 526, Criminal Procedure Code, to any Criminal Court of equal or superior jurisdiction subordinate to its authority, if the requisite grounds set forth in the section are established. The balance of convenience is undoubtedly in favour of the transfer of the criminal proceeding from Moradabad to Allahabad. The application is, therefore, allowed and the proceeding transferred to the Court of the District Magistrate of Allahabad who can try the case himself or send it for trial to any Magistrate subordinate to him who may be competent to try the same.

Application allowed.

CROWN—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 376—Rape—Consent—Complainant, uncorroborated testimony of, value of—Struggle, evidence of.

Where a person is charged with the offence of having committed rape, the question for determination is, whether the woman was or was not a consenting party, and in this connection her testimony without any independent evidence in support thereof that she was not a consenting party is insufficient for a conviction. The first and foremost circumstance that can be looked for in cases of this kind is the evidence of resistance which one would naturally expect from a woman unwilling to yield to sexual intercourse forced upon her. Such a resistance may lead to the tearing of clothes, the infliction of personal injuries and even injuries on her private parts.

Appeal from an order of the Magistrate, First Class, with section 30 powers, Lyallpur, dated the 19th February 1923, convicting the appellant.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda, for the Appellant.

Sardar Kharak Singh, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a conviction under section 376, Indian Penal Code. The appellant, Mahla Ram, has been found guilty of raping one Musammat Raj Bibi while travelling in the Railway compartment, and has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment including three months solitary confinement.

It is alleged that on the 21st December 1922 Musammat Raj Bibi was travelling from Lahore to Sillanwali. When the train reached Toba Tek Singh the other women who were travelling in the same compartment got down and the accused got into the same compartment when the train was in motion. When the train had left the station it is alleged that the accused caught hold of Musammat Raj Bibi, who was sitting close to the window, dragged her down the bench and tucking up her loin cloth forcibly raped her. When the train reached the next station at Dhabanwali the Guard, Bhagwan Singh, P. W. No 4, came out and hearing some cries went to the compartment in which the crime is alleged to have taken place. He found the woman lying on the bench and the accused picking up his loin cloth which was untied. The woman was weeping and abusing the accused. One Abdullah Khan, a Lambardar, P. W. No. 5, who was travelling in an adjoining carriage, also came out and stated that he had heard the woman screaming. The accused was at once arrested and handed over to the Police when the train arrived at Shorkot Station. He was challaned under section 376 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced on conviction as above indicated.

The evidence in support of the prosecution story as set out above consists of the statements of Bhagwan Das, P. W. No. 4, Abdullah Khan, P. W. No. 5 and Musammat Raj Bibi herself who is said to have been raped. Bhagwan Das and Abdullah Khan are not eye-witnesses of the crime and their evidence is, therefore, not of very great importance. Abdullah Khan has testified only to the fact that he heard some cries from an adjoining carriage. Bhagwan Das has stated that when the train stopped at Dhabanwali Station he went to the compartment in which Musammat Raj Bibi was travelling and found her weeping and abusing the accused.

The accused admits that he had sexual intercourse with the woman but contends that he has not been guilty of any offence inasmuch as the intercourse was with the consent of the complainant herself. He has stated that he got into the compartment in which Musammat Raj Bibi was travelling in a hurry and that he did not notice that it was a female compartment. He has further stated that the woman asked him for some money which he at first refused, and that she then herself suggested to him that he could have sexual intercourse with her to which he consented and paid her two eight anna pieces in return. He has also stated that the woman had a boil on her breasts and that when he pressed them she screamed out in pain.

The accused has produced some witnesses in defence, some of whom have stated that when he was arrested he at once said that he had sexual intercourse with the woman with her consent and that he had paid her some money, while others have stated that the woman did not bear a good character, and that she had been living at Lyallpur in a Chakla. The sole question for determination in the case is, whether the accused had connection with the woman with or without her consent, for it is obvious that if it was with her consent no offence was committed, while, on the other hand, if it was without her consent he would be clearly guilty of rape under section 376, Indian Penal Code.

In my opinion the evidence on the record is most inconclusive and it is impossible to hold that the woman was not a consenting party. There is no independent evidence in support of the statement of the complainant and it would be most dangerous to base a conviction on her uncorroborated testimony alone. As observed by Dr. Gour in his well-known treatise on the Penal Law of India, the first and foremost circumstance that can be looked for in cases of this kind is the evidence of resistance which one would naturally expect from a woman unwilling to yield to sexual intercourse forced upon her. Such a resistance may lead to the tearing of clothes, the infliction of personal injuries and even injuries on her private parts. In the present case there is absolutely no evidence on the record of any struggle having taken place nor were marks of any injuries found on the person either of the complainant or of the accused. In these circumstances, I am unable to hold that the accused had connection with the woman without her consent.

I accordingly accept the appeal and acquit the accused.

Appeal accepted.

Appeal against an order of the Court of Session of the Coimbatore Division, in Case No. 63 of the Calendar for 1922.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Doraiswami Udayan has been convicted of causing grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon to one Govindaswamy Udayan by cutting him on both hands and on the head with a sickle at Daharapuram on the 28th March 1922. A certain person named Thangaswami died in February 1922. The wounded man's grandfather and Thangaswami's mother's father were brothers. The accused is the mother's sister's son's son of Thangaswami. Thangaswami died leaving two widows called Parvathi Ammal and Chandrodaya Ammal. They had apparently, in accordance with the wishes of their husband, executed a release-deed, Exhibit M. in favour of Govindaswami by which they released to him certain properties of their deceased husband in which they had a widow's estate. They refused to register it and Govindasami had it compulsorily registered in the Dharampuram Sub-Registry on the 25th March 1922, three days before the occurrence in question. The reason for the unwillingness of the widows to register appears from Govindasami's deposition in the Court of the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Dharapuram as due to the influence of Thangasami's mother, i. e., the mother-in-law of the widows. She wished that Thangasami and his wife should adopt the accused Doraiswami. There is thus, to my mind, ample ground for ill-feeling between the accused and Govindaswami on account of the registration of this release-deed, Exhibit M. One point in the defence theory may be noticed for convenience here, and that is, that Govindaswami has concocted this case against his distant relative, the accused, in order that he might become an undesirable person for the widows to adopt. I think this is extremely far-fetched and I must say that it is entirely unconvincing in the circumstances of this case.

Coming to the evidence, it is undoubted that Govindaswami was wounded. (See the wound certificate, Exhibit A which shows severe injuries to both hands and also a severe wound on the head). Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Aiyar for the defence drew my attention to injuries 2 to 6 which are abrasions, and he urged that these were unaccounted for by the evidence. But one medical man, P. W. No. 2, says that the abrasions could have been caused by a fall over a hard rough surface or by a fall followed by rolling down a flight of steps. There is no doubt that the wounded man ran away pursued after he received his wounds and fell down as one witness says on the steps of the canal. Beyond the evidence of Govindasami himself, we have the evidence of P. W. No. 6, a boy of 14, who in the early morning of the day in question was in the field going east to the river and saw the accused standing after he (the witness) had passed the thrashing floor of Thokkadavu. He heard Govindaswami cry that he was being cut by the accused. He ran west and passed beyond the Thokkadavu and found two other persons Pachaimuthu and Ramaswami standing in the channel. These persons are the father and uncle of the accused. He went further and found two other persons Kallamaraappa and his son Periaswami. He then went to his father Perianna where he slept in the thrashing floor and told him what had happened. He and two other persons, Karuppanna and Marudayappa Udayan ran back towards the scene. They found Govindaswami sitting on the steps of the channel, and hearing from Palaniswami Pillai and Chinnu that the accused had run into a sugarcane field, they surrounded it, dragged the accused out, and took him to the Police Station. The evidence of this witness is entirely borne out by his statement at the Police Station, Exhibit J (2), which was given at 6 A. M. on the day in question. This statement was attacked on the ground (among others) that it recites that there is dispute between Govindaswami and the accused about the land of Thangaswami, and that that is the reason for the assault. It is urged that this lad could not have known anything about the dispute. I do not consider this impossible. The dispute was probably very well known in th neighbourhood. The point that is emphasised about the evidence of this witness is that, when he was cross-examined he said he was threatened by the Police, and that his statement in the lower Court was read out to him by the Sub-Inspector and he was told that he would escape only if he deposed as in it, that they told him to reply to all questions put by the Dorai and to say "I do not remember" to all questions put by the Aiyangar Vakil from Madras. The witness said: "I answered now to the Public Prosecutor what the Police taught me. It is not what I had seen with my own eyes. I know besides something which they had not told me." This is characterized by the learned Sessions Judge as pointing to a distinct attempt on the part of the defence to get at this witness. I am not prepared to go so far as that. But I think that the witness was probably a good deal frightened in cross-examination, and the Sessions Judge notes that he was crying all the time. Under the circumstances, considering especially that his statement is fully corroborated by Exhibit J (2), I am not disposed to attach any weight to this sort of partial admission which he has made in cross-examination. Another very serious circumstance against the accused is the dying declaration, Exhibit B, which implicates the accused and sets out the circumstances relating to the quarrel about the land of Thangaswami. Mr. L. A. Govindaragha a Aiyar points out one or two differences beyond Exhibit B and Exhibit J (2). These, to my mind, are not material especially when it is remembered that the narrative in Exhibit B ends with the appearance of P. W. No. 6 on the scene of offence. Exhibit B is also attacked on the ground that Govindaswami could not have been in a sufficiently conscious state to know what he was doing when he gave it. The medical man, P. W. No. 2, has attested that the patient was quite conscious when his statement was made. Govindaswami as P. W. No. 7 said he was giddy and felt faint but was partly clear. He said that he was unable to sign Exhibit B, because he was faint and a far more probable explanation is that both hands were badly wounded. On a careful perusal of his evidence, I cannot say that there is any ground for saying that he did not know what he was doing when he made the statement, Exhibit B, or any part of it. P. Ws. Nos. 8 and 9 are, as far as one can see, quite independent persons. They speak to the presence of the accused standing east of Thokkadavu on the morning in question and hearing Govindaswami cry out. They saw P. W. No. 6 running, followed by P. W. No. 7, and the accused pursuing him behind. They also depose to the fact that the accused hid in the sugarcane field. The only point that can be urged against P. W. No. 8 was that he was convicted and sent to Jail for 15 days for stabbing his uncle "not being able to bear his blows." There must have been a good deal to be said for him in that case, as he had a very light sentence for stabbing. There is nothing, as far as I can see, against P. W. No. 9 whose name appears in Exhibit J (2). P. Ws. Nos. 10 and 11 are men who searched the sugarcane field. In this state of the evidence it is impossible for me to say that the accused is not guilty. A legal point, however, has been taken and that is this. Mr. Govindaraghava Aiyar points out that there are certain persons who, according to him, would have been available to give evidence about the occurrence, but were not called. The first two are Pachaimuthu and Ramaswami Udayan, the father and uncle of the accused. They, more or less, assisted the accused because when they ran up they caught hold of Govindaswami.

According to the Sub-Inspector of Police, P. W. No. 4, Govindaswami in his dying declaration mentioned the names of Thondi Goundan, Ayodya Udayan, Kalimuthu Udayan and Subramania Udayan. These were examined by the Police but they were not called. The learned Vakil cites in support of his argument two cases, Dhunno Kazi v. Empress (1) and Ram Ranjan Roy v. Emperor (2). In the former case it is laid down that all witnesses who prove their connection with the transaction, connected with the prosecution should be called. It will be noticed from the deposition of P. W. No. 7 that four persons ran up from the south after Govindaswami had turned to run to the north. They may or may not have seen some part of what occured. That is no ground for saying that these witnesses have proved their connection with the transaction in question, or that they may be able to give important information as to the subject of the charge. If such were proved, then the only thing, as laid down in the cases referred to, that can relieve the prosecution from calling the witnesses is the bona fide belief that such witnesses would not speak the truth. The second case is a case of murder and it was laid down that in a capital case the prosecution should place before the Court the testimony of all the available eye-witnesses though brought to the Court by the defence. Neither of these considerations apply here. On the other hand, the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has laid down in Queen-Empress v. Durga (3) that the Public Prosecutor is not bound to call as witnesses for the Crown any person whose evidence in his opinion is unnecessary. Compare also Emperor v. Reed (4). I do not think that the opinions stated in the Calcutta cases have any application to the present. It seems to me tha the case is adequately proved against the accused by the prosecution evidence tendered. If the four persons above-named-could in fact have spoken in favour of the accused, it is curious that they were not called, nor were their names mentioned as persons who knew anything about it by the accused either in his statement before the lower Court or in his appeal petition to this Court. He put in a written statement before the Sub-Magistrate in which he alleges ill-feeling on the part of Govindaswami on account of property and that he was himself dragged out of his house, beaten and produced before the Police. There is no mention of any person whatever to whom this state of things would be known or who would be likely to have said anything material to the record. The accused called no evidence. For these reasons the conviction must be confirmed. The accused has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment and was originally charged under section 307, but I think somewhat mercifully the conviction was reduced to one under section 326. There was a savage attack on a defenceless man and the wounds inflicted were of a very severe character. I am, therefore, not disposed to interfere with the sentence which will also be confirmed.

Conviction set aside.

Petition, under section 439, Criminal Procedure Code, for revision of the order of the Magistrate, First Class, Muzaffargarh, dated the 26th February 1923.

Lala Har Gopal, for the Petitioners.

Sheikh Niaz Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order passed by a First Class, Magistrate at Muzaffargarh under sections 145 and 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The dispute relates to a plot of land measuring 25 kanals, 11 marlas in area and shown in the Settlement Record of 1880 as ghair mumkin qabristan and in possession of the Muhammadan community. The owners of this land as recorded in the Revenue papers were originally two Brahmins, Bhairon Lal, son of Udho Das, and Pokhar Das, son of Kanhiya Lal. Since 1880 a major portion of this land has been gradually brought under cultivation, so much so that in the year 1921, shortly before proceedings under section 145 were instituted, only 10 kanals 6 marlas remained uncultivated and was shown as ghair mumkin qabristan. On the 14th of November 1922 one Maula Dad filed a complaint against one Bhagwan Das and three others, alleging that they had desecrated certain tombs attached to the Shahidanwala graveyard with the intention of wounding the feelings of the Muhammadan Community and that they should be punished under section 297 of the Indian Penal Code. This complaint was made over to Sheikh Muhammad Murid Akbar, Magistrate, for disposal. On the 15th of November 1922 the learned Magistrate, without being moved by any member of the Muhammadan Community, attached the graveyard in question, and issued notices to the parties concerned requiring them to attend his Court on the 28th of November 1922 and to put in written statements of their respective claims as respects the fact of actual possession of the subject of dispute. In pursuance of this order written statements were put in by the parties, and it was stated by Maula Dad that the area of the Shahidanwala graveyard was about 25 kanals during the last three Settlements and that the accused had demolished the graves and had brought a large portion of that area under cultivation. The opposite party stated that the Muhammadans used to bury their dead with the permission of the proprietors and that the whole of the land claimed was never used as a graveyard. They further stated that a major portion of the area claimed by the first party was actually under cultivation and in possession of the second party and that there was no apprehension of a breach of the peace. It was consequently contended that section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code had no application to this case. The learned Magistrate made over the case instituted under section 297 of the Indian Penal Code for inquiry to one Lala Gurditta Ram, Honorary Magistrate, and asked him also to submit a report on the question as to who was actually in possession of the land in dispute. Lala Gurditta Ram examined a very large number of witnesses in this case on both sides, and came to the conclusion that the Muhammadan Community was not in possession and that no case under section 297 had been established against the accused. The learned Magistrate, however, came to a different conclusion and held that, in view of the Settlement entries of 1880, it could not be definitely stated as to who was in actual possession of the subject of dispute, and he consequently attached the same under section 146 (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code.

In my opinion the order of the learned Magistrate was wholly without jurisdiction and must be set aside. There was no satisfactory evidence on the record that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace, and, in the absence of any such evidence, I do not think that proceedings should have been taken under sections 145 and 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. The object of section 145 is to bring to an end by a summary process disputes relating to land, etc., which are in their nature likely, if not suppressed, to end in breaches of the peace. The learned Magistrate observes in his judgment that the affair had a tinge of religion and that, therefore, a breach of the peace was apprehended. I do not think that the mere circumstance that the dispute is one of a religious nature is sufficient to justify a Magistrate to take action under section 145. There must be positive evidence on the record that the breach of the peace is likely to occur if proceedings under this section are not taken. In the present case it appears that the land which in 1880 was shown as a part of the graveyard has been gradually brought under cultivation to the prejudice of the Muhammadan Community. No breach of the peace has occurred during the last 40 years, and it seems to me hardly likely that any such untoward results would now ensue if the property is not attached under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In fact, no apprehension of a breach of the peace was alleged by the complainant in his petition, and no application was made by any member of the Muhammadan Community for action being taken under this section. There are one or two witnesses to the effect that the Brahmin proprietors used to cut some reeds from this land and that this fact was resented by the Muhammadans, but I do not think that this alone was sufficient for the Magistrate to take action under section 146 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The next question for consideration is as to who was in actual possession of the property when proceedings were taken under the section in question. There is a large volume of evidence on the record from which it appears that the Brahmin proprietors have been cultivating the land in question for a large number of years and that the Muhammadan Community has not been in possession. They may possibly have a right to possess this land, but a right to possess is quite different from actual physical possession, and I do not think that questions as to the rights of parties can legitimately be the subject of inquiry in proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. This section is concerned solely with the fact of actual physical possession, whether lawful or unlawful, and questions as to rights are quite irrelevant and entirely outside the scope of this section. The learned Magistrate thinks that, because the Muhammadan Community have a right to possess this land, they must also be considered to be in possession. I am unable to agree with him in this view. The actual physical possession has been clearly proved to be with the petitioners, and they must remain in possession until evicted in due course of law by means of a civil suit.

I accept the revision and, setting aside the order of the learned Magistrate, direct that attachment should be removed and that possession should be restored to the proprietors.

A direct contradiction between the evidence and the finding of the Court is a material irregularity which would justify interference in revision. [p. 994, col. 2.]

Under O. XXXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code the Court is concerned only with the value of the property in the alleged pauper's possession, not with his efforts to realize it; if the property could fetch more than a certain amount it does not matter in the least whether the alleged pauper tried to obtain it. [p. 994, col. 1.]

In a suit to redeem a mortgage of property of which the plaintiff is not in possession, the right to redeem which he asserts, is the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of r. 1 of O. XXXIII of the Code and in deciding, whether he is entitled to sue as a pauper or not the value of that right must not be included in the means of which he is possessed. [p. 995, col. 2.]

Revision of an order of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, dated 9th February 1923, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case No. 20 of 1922.

Mr. K. K. Gandhe, for the Applicant.

Messrs. M. Gupta, S. B. Gokhale, M. K. Golwalkar and V. Bose, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant's petition for leave to sue as a pauper was rejected by the District Judge of Hoshangabad and he has applied here for revision of that order of rejection. In the plaint filed with his petition he alleged that he was the grandson of one Girwar Shah, who in 1885 had mortgaged a village to the defendant for Rs. 20,000 and that the defendant had ever since then been in possession of the village in lieu of interest according to the terms of the contract. He claimed, therefore, to redeem the village for Rs. 20,000. The order on his petition for leave to sue as a pauper is short and may be quoted in full. It runs as follows: "Applicant himself admits he has not tried to raise money on the equity of redemption by mortgage or sale of all or any part of the equity of redemption. The mortgage is for Rs. 20,000 and there is evidence that the property is worth Rs. 40,000 which makes it clear that a considerable sum can be raised on the equity of redemption. In view of Kapildeo Singh v. Ramrikha Singh (1). I reject the application to sue in forma pauperis. Each party to bear its own costs. Pleader's fees allowed Rs. 15."

(2) It is contended in this Court on behalf of the proposed defendant that an application for revision of this order cannot lie under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and reliance is placed on the statement of opinion by Walsh, J., in Mahadeo Sahai v. Secretary of State for India (2) that an order refusing permission to sue as a pauper could not be considered as a "case decided" within the meaning of the Full Bench decision in Buddhoo Lal v. Mewa Ram (3). The remark was entirely obiter, the application for revision being held to be unsustainable on the merits, and Mr. Justice Piggott in the same case refused to express any opinion on the question for that reason, though his judgment is not lacking in indications of an opinion, that the order was such as could be examined in revision under section 115. That is, in our opinion, also the effect of the decision of the majority of the Full Bench in Buddhoo

Lal v. Mewa Ram (3), in which we respectfully concur, and the view taken consistently by the Allahabad High Court until Walsh, J., dissented from it in the case mentioned. It is expressed in Chattarpal Singh v. Raja Ram (4) and Muhammad Husain v. Ajudhia Prasad (5), and also by necessary implication in Kapildeo Singh v. Ramrikha Singh (1) cited by the learned District Judge in his order in this case. The Calcutta High Court has also admitted applications in revision against orders refusing permission to sue as a pauper in Debo Das v. Mohunt Ram Charn Dass (6) and Gopal Chandra Neogy v. Bigoo Mistry (7). We hold, therefore, that this Court has power under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code to revise an order refusing to grant permission to sue as a pauper.

(3) It is further contended that section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code does not permit revision in the present case because the lower Court had jurisdiction to decide whether permission to sue as a pauper should or should not be given, and in deciding that matter has not acted illegally or with material irregularity even if the decision be wrong in the opinion of this Court. It is admitted on all sides that the applicant has nothing in the world which could be sold or pledged beyond his rights in the property which he seeks to redeem and the learned District Judge appears to have rejected the application solely on the ground that no attempt has, in his opinion, been made to raise money on the equity of redemption of that property. Now, apart from the fact that the evidence proves beyond doubt that the applicant has tried to do this and has failed, a perusal of r. 1 of O. XXXIII shows very clearly that the Court is concerned only with the value of the property in the alleged pauper's possession, not with his efforts to realise it; if the property could fetch more than a certain amount it does not matter in the least whether the alleged pauper tried to obtain it or not.

(4) But from the finding stated we may perhaps infer another, in respect of the matter really in issue, to the effect that the equity of redemption could be sold for more than Rs. 675, the amount of the fee payable on the plaint proposed to be filed, if proper efforts had been made. This finding is as obviously wrong as the other, as there is perfectly credible evidence on the record, which has not been contradicted or discredited or even challenged in any way, showing beyond doubt that the applicant went to several people and tried to raise money on the security of his rights, and they all were and are still unwilling to lend him anything at all on them or to buy his claim or any part of it. It is, however, doubtful whether either of these findings could be disturbed under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, though we are inclined to the opinion that such a degree of direct contradiction between the evidence and the finding is material irregularity which would justify interference in revision.

(5) But there is a distinct illegality in the decision, in that the learned District Judge has included in the property of which he had to examine the value under r. 1 of O. XXXIII, to see whether that value exceeded Rs. 675 or not, certain property which that rule itself says shall be excluded; indeed, it is the only property for valuation and if it is left out of account, as we are decidedly of opinion it must be, there is nothing left. The ruling which the learned District Judge has followed is that of the Allahabad High Court in Kapildeo Singh v. Ramrikha Singh (1) in which the Madras ruling now cited on behalf of the applicant, Vendanta Desikacharyulu v. Perindevamma (8) is mentioned.

(6) Neither of these judgments can be said to contain an examination of the question now before us. Indeed, in the Madras case that question apparently had not actually arisen at the stage which the case had reached, and a remark by the learned Judges that "it is not the intention of the law to compel persons seeking relief to mortgage their claims" cannot be called a decision on the question whether the property then under consideration was or was not a part of the subject-matter of the suit. In the Allahabad case the application was for leave to sue for redemption as a pauper, as it is here, and Knox and Karamat Husain, JJ., said no more on the matter before us now than that they did "accept the contention that the petitioner in trying to raise money upon the equity of redemption would not in effect be mortgaging his claim." If that is an expression of the opinion that in a suit for redemption the equity of redemption is not a part of the subject-matter of the suit, we must respectfully dissent.

(7) The reasons for taking the contrary view, which to us seems almost self evident are well set out in the judgment in which Mr. Justice Plowden referred the case of Harnam Singh v. Kirpa Ram (9) to a Full Bench of the Chief Court of the Punjab and practically the same proposition seems to have been assumed as unquestionable by every body concerned in the Bombay High Court in Fatmabai v. Dossabhoy Rustomji Umrigar (10), the contest there being over a different matter.

(8) The different meanings in which the terms "property" and "subject-matter" occurring in r. 1 of O. XXXIII are commonly used give rise to some confusion of thought in this matter. It is apparently accepted as axiomatic that in a suit for possession of land by the owner against a treaspasser the subject-matter of that suit is the land for the purposes of the rules under discussion. But it is clear that the subject-matter is not the earth and stones lying in a particular place, but the plaintiff's right to possess that earth and those stones because he is the owner. In such a suit the plaintiff asks for the enforcement of his right to possess the land because he is the owner of it. Here also he asks for the enforcement of the same right for the same reason; the fact that he admits he will have to satisfy certain conditions and make certain payments before he can have that right enforced, does not make the right any less the subject-matter of the suit.

(9) It may be that all these considerations would not apply to the case of a plaintiff still in possession of the property he seeks to redeem, though that question is hardly likely to arise, as such a person would in all probability be possessed of other means sufficient to exclude him from the definition of a pauper. It is, however, not necessary and, therefore, would not be proper for us to decide that question in this case, but it is not impossible that some such matter underlay the Allahabad judgment that has been mentioned. But we are very distinctly of opinion that in a suit to redeem a mortgage of property of which the plaintiff is not in possession, the right to redeem which he asserts is the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of of O. XXXIII of the Civil Pocedure Code, and in deciding whether he is entitled to sue as a pauper or not the value of that right must not be included in the means of which he is possessed. The decision in the present case, therefore, is based solely on a fact which the law expressly orders to be excluded from consideration in this respect, and that is plainly an illegality. The order will accordingly be set aside, and the application to sue as a pauper will be granted. The opposite party will pay all the applicant's costs in both Courts. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be Rs. 30.

Court to annul every transfer of property made by an insolvent if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years from the date of the transfer provided it comes to a finding that such transfer was not made in good faith and for valuable consideration. The section contemplates that action under it will be taken by the Receiver but it does not mean that even where the Receiver refuses or neglects to act no one else can set the proceedings under this section in motion. Whether the Court chooses to take action itself under the section or is moved by the Receiver or by a creditor it is not bound by any period of limitation and Art. 181 of Sch. Pirthi Nath v. Basheshar Nath, 69 Ind. Cas. 403, followed.

Miscellaneous first appeal from the order of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 26th April 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.
Lala Jagan Nath, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal has arisen are shortly these:—On the 20th of April 1916 one Shankar applied to the District Judge of Hissar asking that he should be adjudicated an insolvent. On the 19th of August 1916 the Court made the order of adjudication. On the 13th of October 1921 one Kunj Lal, a creditor, applied under section 53 of the Insolvency Act (V of 1920), that a gift made by the insolvent on the 9th of January 1916 in favour of his sons and wife should be declared invalid and should be cancelled. This application was accepted by the learned District Judge and the gift in question was annulled. Against this decision an appeal has been preferred to this Court by the transferees through Mr. Shamair Chand, and I have heard Mr. Jagan Nath on behalf of the creditors.

Two contentions have been raised before me by Mr. Shamair Chand in this appeal. Firstly, it is contended that it was not competent to the creditors to make an application for setting aside the gift and that it was only the Receiver who could make such an application under section 53 of the Insolvency Act. The second contention is that the application was time-barred under Art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act, inasmuch as it was made more than three years after the transfer or even the date on which the order of adjudication was made. In my opinion, there is no substance in any of these contentions, and they must be overruled. Section 53 of the Act provides that such transfers as are therein specified shall be voidable as against the Receiver and may be annulled by the Court. There is no doubt that this section contemplates that action will be taken by the Receiver, but I do not think that it means that even when the Receiver refuses or neglects to act, no one else can set the proceedings under this section in motion. The Receiver had taken no action for five years after the order of adjudication was made and, in these circumstances, the creditors were, in my opinion, justified in assuming that he declined to take action. It, however, appears to be altogether unnecessary to pursue this matter any further, as I find that there is an application on the record, dated the 9th of February 1922, by the Receiver also asking the Court to annul the transfer and to declare that it would be inoperative as against him. In Pirthi Nath v. Basheshar Nath (1) it has been held by a Bench of this Court that an Official Receiver can make an application requesting the Court to take action under this section at any time during the pendency of the insolvency proceedings, and that Art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act is no bar to such an application.

Next, it is argued that the application of the creditor, dated the 13th of October 1921, was barred by limitation under Art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act. It is contended that this Article is not limited to applications made under the Code of Civil Procedure and that it is a general residuary provision covering all applications which do not fall under any other Article in the Act. On the other hand, it is argued by Mr. Jagan Nath on behalf of the respondents that the Article is limited in its scope and that it is restricted to applications under the Code of Civil Procedure only. A large number of authorities have been cited on both sides, and I have been asked to refer this question to a Full Bench if I feel any doubts in the matter. The question whether Art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act is limited in its scope and is restricted to applications made under the Code of Civil Procedure, or whether it applies to applications made under local or special laws as well is not free from difficulty; but I do not think that this question really arises in this case and it, therefore, appears to me wholly unnecessary that the matter should be referred to a Full Bench. The case of Pirthi Nath v. Basheshar Nath (1), which is the latest decision of this Court on this point and to which reference has already been made, practically concludes this question. In that case an application was made by the Official Receiver for the annulment of certain payments made more than three years prior to that date, and it was held that such an application was not governed by Art. 181 of the Indian Limitation Act and that the right to move in the matter accrued to the Receiver from day to day as long as the insolvency proceedings continued. The language of section 53 makes it incumbent on the Court to annul every transfer of property made by an insolvent if the transferor is adjudged an insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer, provided the Court comes to a finding that such transfer was not made in good faith and for valuable consideration. As held in Pirthi Nath v. Basheshar Nath (1), it does not appear from the wording of this section that if the Court chooses to take action itself, it is bound by any period of limitation. Therefore, the fact that it was in this case moved to take action by the creditor should not make any difference whatever.

Following the authority cited above, I am of opinion that "the Court can take action under section 53 at any time during the pendency of the proceedings when a transfer open to objection under the said section is brought to its notice." I accordingly hold that the application was not barred by time and that Art. 181 had no application to this case. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 178, scope of—Suit by landlord against tenant—Dispute as to occupancy rights—Compromise by tenant giving up claim, validity of.

Where there is a bona fide dispute between a landlord and the tenant as to the latter's possession of occupancy rights in the land and a compromise decree is passed in the suit on the admission of the tenant that no such rights exist, the tenant cannot subsequently contend that he, having as a matter of fact acquired occupancy rights in the land at the date of the compromise, the decree was not binding on him. To such a case section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application. The section would be applicable if the occupancy right of the tenant was recognised and then given up by him under the compromise.

A compromise decree was passed in a suit brought by a landlord against the tenant in which there was a dispute about the existence of occupancy rights in the land in favour of the tenant. The compromise stated: "It has been settled between your petitioners, the plaintiff and the defendant, that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the land in suit," and further, "that your petitioner, the defendant, has given up his claim to the kashtkari right in the land decreed:"

Held, that the compromise did not offend against the provisions of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 22nd December 1920, modifying that of the Sub-Judge, Darbhanga, dated the 31st May 1920.

Mr. P. Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants in the suit against a decision of the District Judge of Darbhanga, dated the 22nd December 1920.

The suit was instituted by the plaintiffs as proprietors of certain mauzas which had been held in lease for a term of years by the defendants who carried on the business of indigo manufacture upon the leased property to recover back 43 bighas odd of land which had been in possession of the defendants as ticcadars under their lease. In the appeal before us the dispute only concerns an area of something over 20 bighas of land.

The case put forward by the defendants is that, although they held the land now in dispute under the ticca lease which expired in the year 1918, they had in fact acquired an occupancy right in that land before the lease began in the year 1901. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, relied upon a decree passed in Suit No. 37 of 1900 in which the very question was in issue as to whether the defendants had any kashtkari right in the land now in dispute and that suit, they say, was determined after compromise and by the decree it was found, as admitted in the compromise, that the defendants had no claim to kashtkari rights in the land. The decree arrived at after compromise in that suit and the ticca lease granted in 1901 were practically parts of the same arrangements which was then come to. The lease is dated the 29th May 1901 and no doubt before that lease was granted the terms of the compromise of the suit then pending had been arranged between the parties in the suit, the decree in the suit being dated the 5th June 1901. We have not had the lease placed in evidence before us but it is not disputed that by the terms of the lease the defendants undertook at the end of their term, that is to say, in the year 1918, to deliver up possession of all the lands leased. By the terms of the compromise decree they gave up their claim to any kashtkari right they might have had or which they might have been able to establish in the lands now in dispute and the question which we have to determine in this appeal is, whether that decree must be taken as binding upon the parties to-day or whether the compromise which was the basis of the decree is bad as being in contravention of the provisions of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That section provides that: "Nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant made before or after the passing of this Act shall take away an occupancy right in existence at the date of the contract." It is contended that at the date of the compromise the defendants had in fact acquired an occupancy right in the land in suit and, therefore, even if they had agreed to give up that occupancy right and take a fresh lease which covered not only the land in suit but also the whole village in which the land was situated as well as other villages, nevertheless that being an agreement taking away an occupancy right in existence it was not valid by reason of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and, therefore, could not be given effect to now. In so far as the ticca lease itself is concerned, I quite agree that any contract contained therein to give up an existing right of occupancy would not be binding upon the holder of the occupancy right, but very different considerations arise when one is dealing with the effect of a compromise arrived at in a suit the subject-matter of which is the very right to an occupancy holding at all. The compromise, or rather the effective part of it, is in these words:—"In the above case it has been agreed and settled between your petitioners, the plaintiffs and the defendants, that a decree be passed in favour of your petitioners, the plaintiffs, in respect of the land in suit." Then follow some terms acknowledging the receipt of mesne profits and then comes these important words: "That your petitioners, the defendants, have given up their claim to the kashtkari right in the lands decreed." Then follow certain terms as to granting a lease for 19 years of certain mauzas including that in which the lands in dispute in that action were situated. It is contended on behalf of the defendants that the real meaning of that clause which I have just referred to in the compromise was that the defendants gave up a right which they already had in the lands in suit; that is to say, that they gave up their kashtkari right and in return therefor they took a lease for 17 years of those lands and others on certain terms. If it can be made out that the compromise between the parties recognised the right of the defendants as kashtkaridars at that time and that the defendants undertook to give up that right in exchange for a lease of a different sort then, I think, the defendants in that case would be entitled to succeed because such an agreement would, to my mind, be in direct conflict with the provisions of section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but I cannot read the compromise in that way. It must be remembered that one of the questions, if not the main question in the suit, which resulted in that compromise was, whether the plaintiffs in that suit were entitled to khas possession of the lands or whether the defendants had kashtkari rights in them, and that dispute was settled by the defendants giving up their claim to the kashtkari rights; that is to say, the defendants acknowledged that they had no claim at all to the kashtkari right. In other words, they submitted to a decree on behalf of the plaintiffs for possession on the ground that their kashtkari rights had not been established. The decree itself was passed in the terms of the compromise and I think it must be accepted that the dispute between the parties in that suit was determined by declaring in effect that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover possession of the land and that the defendants had no kashtkari right in it. This, to my mind, leads to an entirely different result from that which would have followed had the defendants in that suit agreed not to give up their claim to the kashtkari right but had agreed to abandon or to give up a kashtkari right which was admittedly in existence at that time. It is said that, if it can be shown at the present day that they had in fact such a kashtkari right when the compromise was entered into, then the compromise is one which was in contravention of section 178 because it in fact gave up a right to which the defendants were entitled. In my opinion, it is not open to the defendants now to question the validity of the decree which was arrived at at that time. The question in dispute at that time was clearly whether such a right existed or whether it did not and there was undoubtedly a bona fide dispute between the parties as to the existence of such a right and if by compromise the parties agreed that such a right did not exist and that agreement is enforced by the decree then it is not open any longer to either of the parties to question the finding or validity of that decree.

In the view I take of this case, it is unnecessary to consider whether what was done upon the occasion of the compromise was a surrender within section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act because whether it was a surrender or whether it was a settlement of a bona fide dispute as to the existence of the right in question in either case it would be equally binding upon the defendants. In my opinion this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff, whose father Chimnaji was admittedly an illegitimate issue, sued for recovery of a 1-5th share in Deshmukhi Lawajma from the defendant who is the registered recipient. The pleas in defence now material were that Chimnaji's father Raiban was a Kshatriya and, therefore, neither Chimnaji nor the plaintiff was entitled to succeed to his share in the Lawajma. An alternative plea was, that Chimnaji had in 1883 agreed to receive only a 1-10th share in the Lawajma. Neither of these pleas has succeeded in the lower Courts which have held that the plaintiff's family is Kunbi and, therefore, Sudra and Chimnaji was entitled to succeed to Raibhan and that the agreement does not bind the plaintiff as Chimnaji had only a life interest and could not by his agreement affect his successor's interest.

The agreement, Exhibit D-1, in spite of the fact that at the end it contained the recital that any dispute raised by the issue of both parties will not be maintainable under the agreement is, in my opinion, a personal agreement by Chimnaji and does not profess to bind his heirs' interest. Chimnaji who was illegitimate was apparently keen on establishing social recognition for himself even at a pecuniary sacrifice and appears to have agreed to accept a 1-10th in lieu of a 1-5th share which was declared by a judicial decision to be his as a consideration for certain man given to his father being continued to be given to him. The recital does not necessarily mean that the successors of Chimnaji and Tukaram will continue to receive and give only a 1-10th share. The clause may well refer to any dispute regarding the man to which each party to the agreement was personally entitled and its object may have been to secure that Tukaram's heirs, in case of his death, would continue to give Chimnaji the man stipulated for in the agreement. The document read as a whole appears to me to create only a personal obligation on the part of Chimnaji to claim only a 1-10th share, but even if the agreement purported to bind Chimnaji's heirs it could not in law bind them as, in my opinion, Chimnaji had no power to affect his successors' interest. The rulings in Krishnaji v. Manwar Ali (1) and Aman Ali v. Imambi (2) referred to an inam governed by the special rules of devolution contained in rule V (2) of the Inam Rules. A Deshmukhi cash inam does not fall under rule VI (2) so as to be governed by rule V (2) but I think the reasoning in Krishnaji v. Manwar Ali (1) may be applied in this case. The grant is a perpetual hereditary grant for the maintenance of the dignity of the members of the family and each person entitled for the time being to a share must be held to be holding that share for his life only.

It is contended that Raibhan was a Kshatriya and that as Chimnaji was illegitimate he could not inherit the Watan. It is also said that, since a Hindu could not contract a legal marriage except in his own caste, and Chimnaji had no caste, the plaintiff his son was also illegitimate. It is on the authority of Ravji v. Sakuji (3) that it is contended that an illegitimate son cannot inherit a Watan. That ruling only says that an illegitimate son cannot inherit a Watan collaterally in preference to legitimate heirs. These points, however, are irrelevant in this case for Chimnaji though illegitimate obtained a decree for his share of the Lawajma as recited in Exhibit D-1; vide also Exhibits P-7 and P 8. It is argued that the decision cannot be used in the present case as binding on Tukaram as the plaintiff does not claim through Chimnaji but independently of him under the grant. But the plaintiff is claiming because he is Chimnaji's son. Chimnaji represented the share of the pension due to his branch though his personal interest was restricted, and I think the decision in Chimnaji's suit as to his right to a share is binding on the defendant. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XLI, r. 6 (2)—Execution of decree—Sale, application to stay—Appeal whether lies—Court, duty of.

An order refusing to stay a sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree during the pendency of an appeal, under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, is appealable as a decree under section 47 of the Code.

Ram Nath Singh v. Kamleshwar Prasad Singh, 9 Ind. Cas. 323; 15 C. W. N. 432, distinguished.

Under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court, in the case of an order for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree, is bound, where an appeal is pending from such decree, to stay the sale on the application of the judgment-debtor, on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit, until the appeal is disposed of.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 29th January 1923.

Lala Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The Senior Subordinate Judge of Ambala has refused to stay a sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree during the pendency of an appeal in this Court, under O. XLI, r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the judgment-debtors have appealed.

It appears that the respondent, Rai Bahadur Benarsi Das, obtained a decree for Rs. 13,827-9-6 against the present appellants which was put into execution, and certain immoveable property belonging to the judgment-debtors was attached. The defendants-judgment-debtors preferred an appeal against this decree to this Court and along with the Memorandum of Appeal filed an application under O. XLI, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, for the stay of execution proceedings. The application came up for hearing before the Chief Justice who rejected it on the 18th November 1922 and ordered that the judgment-debtors should apply to the Executing Court for the stay of sale after the property had been advertised for sale under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. The property having been advertised for sale, the judgment-debtors put in an application for stay which was summarily rejected by the Senior Subordinate Judge by an order which was couched in the following terms:—

"The applicant is present. The proceedings as regards auction-sale cannot be stayed. The applicant can get an order for stay of the auction-sale from the High Court of Judicature at Lahore."

A preliminary objection is raised by Mr. Manohar Lal on behalf of the respondent that the order is not appealable. In my opinion there is no force in this preliminary objection, and it must be overruled. It was held by Scott-Smith, J., in Civil Appeal No. 687 of 1922 that an order refusing to stay a sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree during the pendency of an appeal in this Court under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 6 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code was appealable as a decree under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. No authority has been cited to the contrary, and Ram Nath Singh v. Kamleshwar Prasad Singh (1) on which reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel is not exactly in point. I see no reason to differ from the opinion of Mr. Justice Scott-Smith and I hold that the order is appealable.

On the merits, there can be no manner of doubt that the order is erroneous and must be set aside. Under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) the Court, in the case of an order for the sale of immoveable property in execution of a decree, is bound, where an appeal is pending from such decree, to stay the sale on the application of the judgment-debtor on such terms as to giving security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit until the appeal is disposed of.

I accept the appeal and setting aside the order remand the case to the Senior Subordinate Judge with a direction that he should pass fresh orders in accordance with law. No order as to costs.

Minor, liability of—Debt incurred by father during minority of son—Hypothecation by minor on attaining majority of his own property for father's debt—Want of consideration—Necessity.

Where there is no previous contract by a minor at all but only by his father, the liability of the father can be no consideration for a fresh contract by the minor on attaining majority whereby he hypothecates his property to secure payment of a debt arising out of the said liability. Should it be proved that the liability was incurred for necessaries or benefit of the minor, or that at the time the hypothecation bond was entered into there was a genuine claim against the minor and a suit against him was threatened, then an adjustment of accounts whereby the creditor accepted a certain sum and his undertaking not to sue the minor for the sum due, might be a good consideration for the bond. JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff against a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah reversing a decree of the Munsif of the First Court at Buxar.

The plaintiff, who is the appellant before us, entered into certain transactions with Tribeni Ram, the defendant No. 4 in the suit. The transactions in question were the ordinary transactions between a customer and a tradesman, the plaintiff being the tradesman. The goods were supplied, principally cloth, and a certain amount of money was lent to the defendant No. 4. At the time when these transactions took place the other defendants in the suit, namely, those numbered 1, 2 and 3, were minors although they were living together jointly at that time. The three defendants are all the sons of Musammat Sahodra Kuer. The defendant No. 1 Gopal Narain Ram is her son by her first husband, now deceased. The second and third defendants, Ram Narain Ram and Sheo Narain Ram, are also her sons by her second husband, who is Tribeni Ram, the defendant No. 4. In February 1916 it appears that there was an adjustment of the account existing between the plaintiffs and Tribeni Ram. The account was on bahi khata and a certain Pleader who had been employed both by the plaintiff and by Tribeni Ram was engaged to go through the account and make an adjustment. In the result, it was found that a sum of about Rs. 900 was due from Tribeni Ram. The plaintiff agreed to forego a sum of Rs. 300 reducing the amount due to Rs. 600 and the parties entered into a mortgage which is the subject of the present suit whereby a house belonging to the defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, the sons of Musammat Sahodra Kuer, was hypothecated to secure the debt due amounting to Rs. 600 under the bahi khata transaction. The mortgage was executed by Gopal Narain Ram who is said to have been of age at that date and by Tribeni Ram purporting to act as guardian of the other two defendants his sons who were still minors. The property mortgaged was not the property of Tribeni Ram at all but was the separate property of the three sons of Sahodra Kuer they having inherited it from her as part of their maternal grandfather's estate. The present suit was brought to enforce that mortgage against the first three defendants. Although Tribeni Ram was made a defendant in the suit no relief is claimed against him presumably on the ground that he merely acted in the capacity of guardian of his sons, the second and third defendants.

The genuineness and validity of the bond was challenged by each of the defendants except Tribeni Ram who entered no defence at all. It was also pleaded that the defendants had not entered into any loan or cash transactions at all with the plaintiff or taken any things from his shop nor was there any reason for their doing so and they denied all liability under the mortgage-bond.

The learned Munsif before whom the case came for trial and before whom various issues were raised including an issue as to whether the mortgage-deed was genuine and for consideration found in favour of the plaintiff. He found that the goods had in fact been taken and the loans given to Tribeni Ram; that there had been an adjustment of account; that the bond in suit was genuine and for consideration and that the defendant No.1 had attained his majority at the date when the bond was executed. He did not deal in terms with the question of whether the transactions under which the goods were supplied and the money lent to Tribeni Ram were for the benefit of the minors.

When the case went on appeal to the Subordinate Judge he came to the conclusion that no consideration had been proved for the execution of the bond by or on behalf of the first three defendants. The bahi khata which showed the transactions which formed the considerations for the bond had not been produced in evidence and although it was true that at the time when the bond was entered into there was a sum of Rs. 600 due from Tribeni Ram it was nowhere shown that the goods supplied or the money lent had in any way been supplied or lent for the benefit of the minors and, in these circumstances, having found that all the first three defendants were minors at the date when the transactions took place he came to the conclusion that the bond was not binding upon them because the only consideration for executing the bond was the liability under the bahi khata which was not in any way binding upon the minors. He did not in terms differ from the learned Munsif in finding that the first defendant, Gopal Narain Ram, was of age in February 1916 when the bond was executed. He did, however, find that he was a minor at the date of the bahi khata transactions. He further came to the conclusion that it had not been proved that the bond was properly executed in the presence of two attesting witnesses. Upon this point I think the learned Subordinate Judge took a rather narrow view. One of the attesting witnesses was called and proved that the executants of the bond executed it in his presence and that he attested it, and the bond was produced and showed the signatures of the other attesting witnesses. The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been under some confusion as to the exact effect of section 68 and the following sections of the Indian Evidence Act which require execution of a document of this nature to be proved by one of the attesting witnesses. He said that, as a mortgage-bond must be subscribed by two attesting witnesses under the provisions of section 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, and as in this case only one attesting witness had proved it, that proof was wholly insufficient. I am inclined to think that there was some confusion in the learned Judge's mind in finding that the requirements of the law had not been complied with in so far as proof of the execution of the bond was concerned. In the view I take of this case, however, it is unnecessary to consider whether the evidence of the attesting witness, who was called, when closely looked into was really sufficient to prove the due execution of the bond.

The plaintiff, in my opinion, must fail for this reason. It is nowhere shown that the goods supplied to Tribeni Ram or the loans taken by him were for the benefit of the other three defendants in the case who were minors at that time. They were not liable upon the bahi khata account. Had it been shown that the goods were purchased for their benefit or that the loans were taken for their benefit then it might be that they would have been liable as members of a joint family even though minors under the bahi khata account. In the present case there is an entire absence of evidence upon that most important question. It is contended, however, that the defendant No. 1, at all events, ought to be held liable upon the bond because at the time he executed it he was of age. Assuming, although it is not very clear from the learned Judge's judgment whether he considered that the defendant No. 1 was of age or not, but assuming that he was of age at that time, then it seems to me that, in so far as he was concerned, there was in fact no consideration for the bond. The consideration alleged is the liability under the previous bahi khata account. It is quite clear to my mind that in the absence of any evidence showing that the defendant No. 1 had any liability under that account it cannot be said that the liability which was really a liability of his father Tribeni Ram was any consideration for entering into the mortgage-bond of February 1916. It is well-established that a liability under a contract which is void on the ground that one of the contracting parties is a minor is no consideration for a fresh contract made by the minor on attaining majority. Several cases have been quoted in support of this proposition. I need only refer to Krishnan Chetty v. Vellaichami Thevan (1) and Narendra Lal Khan v. Hrishikesh Mukherjee (2). It would seem to follow, therefore, that where there is no previous contract by the minors at all but only by their father the liability of the father can be no consideration for fresh contract by the minor on attaining majority whereby he hyothecates his property to secure payment of a loan. Had it been shewn that at the time the bond was entered into there was a genuine claim against the minors and had a suit against them been threatened, then this adjustment of account whereby the plaintiff accepted a smaller sum than that which was due and his undertaking not to sue the minors for the sum due might possibly have been a good consideration for the bond, but nothing of the sort has been proved in this case and, in so far as anything can be gathered from the terms of the bond itself, it simply recites that there were dealings between Tribeni Ram and the plaintiff on bahi khata and that on adjustment an amount of Rs. 600 was found due. There is not a word in it to show that the defendant No. 1 ever admitted that he was in any way liable in respect of the goods supplied to his father. If in fact the goods supplied were necessaries and for the benefit of the minors, then it seems to me that the plaintiff has only himself to blame in failing in this case to bring sufficient proof before the Court of that fact. There is no proof at all as to what the goods supplied were, or the circumstances under which they were supplied, and there is certainly no proof to show that there would have been any valid claim against the estate of the minors in respect of the bahi khata account. In these circumstances, although I have no doubt that the transaction is quite genuine as between the plaintiff and Tribeni Ram, I regret that I must come to the same conclusion as that arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

First appeal from the decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 3rd January 1921.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has sprung was brought by the plaintiff-appellant to recover a sum of Rs. 16,990 and certain ornaments alleged to be worth Rs. 8,000.

The two defendants to the suit are two brothers, Goswami Banmali or Banwari Lal and Goswami Damodar Lal. According to the allegations in the plaint these two defendants are members of a joint Hindu family, the second defendant being the managing member. The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that he was the spiritual disciple (chela) of the defendant No. 1 while his wife is the disciple of the second defendant. The case for the plaintiff was that at various times he had advanced sums of money to these defendants and in particular to the second defendant. He also alleged that on the occasion of a gauna ceremony he had lent certain valuable ornaments and utensils to the defendants which they had not returned.

The first defendant denied ever having received any money from the plaintiff. The second defendant, while admitting that there had been money dealings between himself and the plaintiff, did not admit that he had received from the plaintiff the sums which are specified in the plaint. He further denied that he had ever borrowed any ornaments or utensils from the plaintiffs as alleged.

It is necessary to examine in some little detail the allegations in the plaint, for the important question which arises in the suit is the question of limitation.

The claim of the plaintiff may be divided into three parts. He first alleged in paragraph 3 of his plaint that, between the months of December 1908 and December 1911, he had lent to the defendants a sum of Rs. 4,112. His story was that he had, on the 16th December 1911, received part-payment to the extent of Rs. 1,112 and that, therefore, in respect of the dealings of this period there was due to him a sum of Rs. 3,000.

The plaintiff next alleged that, on the 14th and 15th December 1911 he had raised a sum of Rs. 8,000 by way of mortgage and had advanced this money to the defendant No. 2.

Lastly, with respect to the ornaments, the case for the plaintiff was that these had been lent to the defendants for a gauna ceremony in or about the month of February 1915.

This suit was not filed till the 29th October 1918 and on the allegations made in the earlier paragraphs in the plaint it is clear that the suit for recovery both of the money and the ornaments would have been time-barred. However, in paragraph 10 (A) of the plaint the plaintiff described certain documents upon which he relied for the purpose of showing that his claim was still within time.

The suit failed in the Court below. The learned Subordinate Judge appears not to have believed the plaintiff's story either as regards the advance of these monies or the loan of the ornaments. In any case, he was of opinion that the plaintiff had failed to prove by any satisfactory evidence that the claim, even if true, was still within limitation.

The plaintiff has now appealed and the findings of the Court below on all the points found against the plaintiff have been attacked here.

We proceed to deal, in the first instance, with the claim relating to the sum of Rs. 3,000.

We have already mentioned that in the 3rd paragraph of the plaint it was stated that certain loans had been made to the defendants between the months December 1908 and December 1911.

The plaintiff alleged that he had no accounts to produce for the purpose of showing the various dates on which these advances had been made. In his evidence the plaintiff began by stating that the first sum of money which he advanced to the se-count. In the present case there is an entire absence of evidence upon that most important question. It is contended, however, that the defendant No. 1, at all events, ought to be held liable upon the bond because at the time he executed it he was of age. Assuming, although it is not very clear from the learned Judge's judgment whether he considered that the defendant No. 1 was of age or not, but assuming that he was of age at that time, then it seems to me that, in so far as he was concerned, there was in fact no consideration for the bond. The consideration alleged is the liability under the previous bahi khata account. It is quite clear to my mind that in the absence of any evidence showing that the defendant No. 1 had any liability under that account it cannot be said that the liability which was really a liability of his father Tribeni Ram was any consideration for entering into the mortgage-bond of February 1916. It is well-established that a liability under a contract which is void on the ground that one of the contracting parties is a minor is no consideration for a fresh contract made by the minor on attaining majority. Several cases have been quoted in support of this proposition. I need only refer to Krishnan Chetty v. Vellaichami Thevan (1) and Narendra Lal Khan v. Hrishikesh Mukherjee (2). It would seem to follow, therefore, that where there is no previous contract by the minors at all but only by their father the liability of the father can be no consideration for fresh contract by the minor on attaining majority whereby he hyothecates his property to secure payment of a loan. Had it been shewn that at the time the bond was entered into there was a genuine claim against the minors and had a suit against them been threatened, then this adjustment of account whereby the plaintiff accepted a smaller sum than that which was due and his undertaking not to sue the minors for the sum due might possibly have been a good consideration for the bond, but nothing of the sort has been proved in this case and, in so far as anything can be gathered from the terms of the bond itself, it simply recites that there were dealings between Tribeni Ram and the plaintiff on bahi khata and that on adjustment an amount of Rs. 600 was found due. There is not a word in it to show that the defendant No. 1 ever admitted that he was in any way liable in respect of the goods supplied to his father. If in fact the goods supplied were necessaries and for the benefit of the minors, then it seems to me that the plaintiff has only himself to blame in failing in this case to bring sufficient proof before the Court of that fact. There is no proof at all as to what the goods supplied were, or the circumstances under which they were supplied, and there is certainly no proof to show that there would have been any valid claim against the estate of the minors in respect of the bahi khata account. In these circumstances, although I have no doubt that the transaction is quite genuine as between the plaintiff and Tribeni Ram, I regret that I must come to the same conclusion as that arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge and dismiss this appeal with costs.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 90 OF 1921.

Present:—Mr. Justice Lindsay and Mr. Justice Sulaiman.

GOPAL DAS—PLAINTIFF—APPLELANT

Goswami BANMALI LAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment—'Signing,' what amounts to.

Where the usual method of a guru or 'spiritual leader' in sending communications to his chelas or disciples consists in superscribing the communications with the words "Sri Sri Hari Sarnam," and not in affixing his signatures, any communication drawn up in this form and in the hand-writing of the guru will be treated as in this connection to a somewhat similar case which is to be found in Sadasook Agarwalla v. Baikanta Nath Basunia (3).

It is clear on all hands that these letters which bear the superscription were addressed by the second defendant either to the plaintiff or to the plaintiff's wife and that it was understood and was meant to be understood that these were communications proceeding from the second defendant who was their spiritual leader.

We hold, therefore, that, so far as these letters and communications are concerned, any of the them which are found to be in the handwriting of the second defendant and which bear this superscription must be treated as having been signed by the second defendant.

To return to Exhibit No. 3 this is a memorandum or slip which bears the heading "Sri Sri Hari Sarnam." According to the statement of the plaintiff this document is in the writing of defendant No. 2 although the latter has denied the fact.

For the purpose of proving an acknowledgment, however, it appears to us that this document is of no value whatever.

We have already mentioned the fact that on the 14th of December 1911 a mortgage was executed by the plaintiff in favour of one Makundi Lal for the purpose of borrowing a sum of Rs. 8,000.

In the endorsement made upon this mortgage at the time of registration particulars were entered regarding the mode in which money was paid: so many soverigns, so many notes and so much cash. The slip, Exhibit 3, merely repeats the details of these various items and there is nothing in the document more than an acknowledgment by the second defendant that he had received a sum of Rs. 8,000 from the plaintiff in the various denominations of soverigns, notes and cash.

There is nothing in this document whatever to show an acknowledgment of an existing liability for Rs. 3,000 on this date and, therefore, for the purpose of saving limitation in respect to the claim for Rs. 3,000 this document, as we have said, is of no avail. It may have some bearing upon the other question which we shall have to consider later on, namely, whether this sum of Rs. 8,000 borrowed on mortgage in December 1911 was, as a matter of fact, made over to the second defendant?

To continue, regarding the claim for Rs. 3,000 the next document upon which the plaintiff lays stress is a document, Exhibit 4, which is printed at page 123 of the record. This document bears date of the 14th December 1911 being the date upon which the mortgage was executed although at the bottom of the document there is another date, Magh Badi 10th Sambat 1968, which would correspond to the 13th January 1912.

According to the plaintiff's statement this document is in the writing of the defendant No. 2 and in connection with the claim for Rs. 3,000 he refers to one entry in this list which reads as follows:—

"Paid on account of Babuji's parole debt, Rs. 1,112

"(babuji ke hath udhar ke chukai)."

We are unable to spell out of this document any acknowledgment on the part of the second defendant (assuming that the document is in his handwriting) that on the date on which the memorandum was prepared he owed the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 3,000. The plaintiff tries to make this out by saying that an account having been taken between the parties a sum of Rs. 4,112 was found due to him and that after deduction of this payment of Rs. 1,112 there was left a balance of Rs. 3,000.

That, however, is not stated in the document itself. Further it is important to consider the language of the entry in the document in question. To us it appears as it did to the Subordinate Judge a , that the entry does not import that the sum of Rs. 1,112 was being paid on account of and in reduction of a debt of a larger amount. The word used in "chukai" which ordinarily signifies the complete satisfaction and discharge of a debt. In our opinion, therefore, the plaintiff can derive no assistance from the entry in this Exhibit 4 for the purpose of proving that this claim is within time.

We now come to another document which is marked Exhibit 12 and which is printed at page 103 of the record. This again bears the superscription Sri Sri Har cond defendant was sent in consequence of a letter, Exhibit 1, page 105, which bears a date corresponding to the 28th December 1908. That letter was written from Naudip or Nadia where the second defendant is alleged to have been residing at the time. The plaintiff's story is that he borrowed the sum of Rs. 1,000 from a banker in Benares and sent the money by a messenger to the second defendant.

(3) 31 C. 1043; 9 C. W. N. 83.

The plaintiff proceeds to state that at subsequent times, although no dates were specified, he advanced sums of Rs. 800, Rs. 300 and Rs. 200 to the second defendant. He winds up his statements on this part of the case by saying that in the month of December 1911 an account was taken between the parties and a sum of Rs. 4,112 was found to be owing to the plaintiff.

It has been strongly pressed against the plaintiff that he has failed to produce his account-books in Court. The plaintiff's story is to the effect that, some time before these advances were made, he had given up keeping accounts, having separated from his brothers who were in business in Benares as money-lenders. We are not disposed to accept the statement of the plaintiff that no accounts were kept by him of the items advanced to the defendants, for there is evidence on the record which will indicate that, in spite of a separation between himself and his brothers, the plaintiff still carried on a money-lending business and, in such circumstances, it would be reasonable to expect that he kept some account of his money dealings. However, we have to deal with the case on the footing that no accounts have been produced and we have to see on what evidence the plaintiff relies for the purpose of showing that this money was advanced.

Four papers are relied on by the plaintiff for the purpose of showing that this money was due to him. In the first place, we have a document marked Exhibit 3 which is printed at page 121 of the record. This is a memorandum which is alleged to be in the handwriting of the second defendant.

We may pause here to mention one fact which is to be taken into consideration in dealing with the various documents upon which the plaintiff relies for the purpose of saving limitation. It is the fact that none of the letters or memoranda upon which reliance is placed by the plaintiff bear the signature of the second defendant, Damodar Lal, that is to say, in none of these documents can we find the name of Damodar Lal.

It is claimed, however, that in his correspondence with his disciples this defendant is not in the habit of signin his name. The regular method of correspondence, it is said, consists in superscribing all communications with the words "Sri Sri Hari Sarnam" and there is evidence to show that this is a customary mode in which Gurus or spiritual preceptors address communications to their disciples. The defendant himself when examined on this point admitted (see page 72 of the record) that when he writes to his sewaks, meaning his disciples, he is not in the habit of affixing his signature. Another witness on this point is Gokul Chand who also deposes to the same effect, saying that spiritual preceptors do not sign their names when addressing letters to their disciples. The reason given by the plaintiff for this practice is that it would be derogatory for a person holding a high position like a guru to subscribe his name in a letter underneath the name of his disciple.

We are satisfied that this is a usual practice in communications of this kind and we hold, therefore, that any communication which is drawn up in this form, although it does not bear the actual name of the defendant No. 2 must nevertheless be treated as being signed by him. The question whether words such as those we have referred to inserted at the top of letters or other communications, can be treated as signatures, has been dealt with in a case reported in Gangadharrao Venkatesh v. Shidramapa Balapa Desai (1) where it was held that the words "guru samrath" written at the top of a letter addressed by a preceptor to his pupil constituted a signature for the purposes of section 19 of the Limitation Act. We find, moreover, that a similar decision has been given in the Madras case which is to be found reported as Chidambaram Chetti v. Ramaswami Chettiar (2). We may also refer existence in the manner we have already indicated.

Dr. Sen has argued before us that, in view of certain questions which were put to the plaintiff in cross-examination, the defendants really admitted that these documents were in the writing of Damodar Lal. The plaintiff was asked if it were not a fact that he had discovered these two documents in certain books of account belonging to the second defendant which had come into his possession at the time of the execution of a decree. He denied that this was the manner in which he had come to have these documents in his possession. We cannot agree that there is anything in these questions asked in cross-examination to justify our holding that the defendants have in any way admitted that these documents were, as a matter of fact, in their account-books and were found by the plaintiff in the manner suggested.

This brings us to the end of the case so far as it relates to the claim for Rs. 3,000. Our finding is that there is no proof of any acknowledgment which would save limitation as regards this claim for Rs. 3,000 so that, even if letters of later dates, of which there are many on the record, can be taken to contain any admission regarding a liability for the sum just mentioned they would be of no avail inasmuch as it cannot be shown that those admissions were made at a time while limitation was still running.

We agree, therefore, with the first Court that the plaintiff has failed to prove that his claim as regards this item is within time.

We come now to the claim in respect of the sum of Rs. 8,000. We have already adverted to the fact that this money was borrowed after the execution of a mortgage-deed in the month of December 1911. The document itself contains a recital to the effect that Gopal Das was borrowing this money for the purpose of advancing a loan to Damodar Lal and also to meet household expenses.

The words in the document are "ba gharaz dene qarz apne guru Damodar Lal."

There was a good deal of argument apparently in the Court below as to the interpretation of these words but we have no doubt whatever that what they mean is that Gopal Das was raising money on mortgage for the purpose of making a loan to Damodar Lal. Damodar Lal himself attested this document and there is evidence which shows, in our opinion, that he knew that the recital was in the document and in spite of his denial we do not believe him when he says that he got none of the money which was raised by this mortgage.

Letters which were proved to have been written by the second defendant show to us unmistakeably that Damodar Lal got at least a portion of this money advanced to him. We refer in particular to one letter, Exhibit 24, which is to be found at page 147 of the record. That letter was written on the 14th October 1915 and contains the following passage:

"As regards Makundi Lal's money also it is matter of days only when every account will be cleared by the grace of Sriji."

Reading this letter with other letters which were written at or about the same time there can, in our opinion, be no doubt whatever that Damodar Lal knew very well that he was liable to the plaintiff for the sum or a portion of the sum which had been borrowed on mortgage.

When the second defendant was in the witness-box he was called upon to explain these statements. The only answer that he could give was that he knew that the plaintiff had borrowed money on mortgage from Makundi Lal. He said that the plaintiff was pressing him for help to raise loan in order to pay off Makundi Lal and so he says that the statement regarding Makundi Lal's debt contained in the letter, Exhibit 24, relates to certain exertions which he was making for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to raise a fresh loan to pay off Makundi Lal. We have no doubt whatever that that is a false statement and indeed it has been conceded before us that, in view of the evidence and particularly by the evidence in the letters, it is impossible to accept the story told by Damodar Lal in the witness-box.

The learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that none of this money had come into the hands of the second defendant, but we do not agree with him.

However, the question still remains whether the plaintiff has been able to show that his claim is within limitation for, unless it is so, our finding to the effect that the second defendant had this money or a portion of it will be of no assistance to the plaintiff.

We start with the fact that, according to the plaintiff's own case, this sum of Rs. 8,000 was advanced on the 14th December 1911. The suit was filed on the 29th October 1918.

We have already referred to the document, Exhibit 24, at page 147, and have held that it certainly contains an acknowledgment of liability on the part of Damodar Lal for the debt which was due by the plaintiff to Mukundi Lal.

The date of that letter, however, is the 14th October 1915 and this acknowledgment will, therefore, not save limitation.

We have, therefore, to consider the further question as to whether the plaintiff has been able to produce any further evidence for the purpose of showing that an acknowledgment of this liability was made at any time within three years commencing from the 14th December 1911.

Here, again, the plaintiff has to fall back upon two documents which have already been discussed by us, namely, Exhibit 12 and Exhibit 13. We have already dealt fully with the evidence regarding these documents and have discussed their history as given by the plaintiff in the witness-box. We have expressed our opinion that it is not proved that either of these documents is in the writing of the second defendant and so we need not dwell upon this matter any further. It is sufficient for us to say that we find that the plaintiff has failed to show that his claim regarding this sum of Rs. 8,000 was within limitation at the time the suit was filed.

We now come to the third part of the case, namely, that relating to the ornaments. What is the plaintiff's case in this respect? His story is that ornaments and utensils of an approximate value of Rs. 8,000 were lent to the defendants in the month of Phagun Sambat 1971, corresponding to the month of February 1915. The occasion of the lending of these ornaments was the gauna ceremony of the sons of the defendant. The story of the plaintiff was that these articles were taken on loan and that they were never returned. We have already mentioned that both the defendants denied ever having borrowed the articles in question.

The second defendant, who was the only one of the defendants who went into the witness-box, deposed that the story of the loan of the ornaments was not true.

In the course of the trial a small account book or bahi was produced containing the entries which are printed at page 79 of the record. This document is proved to be in the writing of the second defendant. The account-book was in possession of the plaintiff and was produced by him in Court. The defendant suggested in his cross-examination that the plaintiff had got possession of it by unlawful means.

There can be no doubt that this book contains a list of certain ornaments which were in the possession of the second defendant at the time when his son and his nephew were married.

The particular portion of the entry in this book upon which the plaintiff relies is the list which is written underneath the words 'bahuji kitaraf ki.' The plaintiff's story is that the word bahuji refers to his, (the plaintiff's) wife. The defendant, on the other hand, denies this and says that the word bahuji refers to the wife of a brother of his named Sham Lal. We are bound to say at once that we do not believe this statement. We have no doubt whatever that on the occasion of the marriage of these two boys the defendant No. 2 did not borrow ornaments and utensils from the plaintiff.

That, however, does not by any means settle the case, for the plaintiff has admitted that after the marriage (biah) was over these ornaments or at any rate a number of them were returned. The case he makes out in his plaint is that they were lent out on a second occasion, that is to say, on the occasion of the gauna ceremony.

It must be confessed that the evidence of the plaintiff on this part of the case is by no means satisfactory and it is proved that he has made at various times conflicting statements. In the trial of the present case he certainly endeavoured to make out that the whole of the ornaments which were mentioned in the lists attached to the plaint were lent for the second time on the occasion of the gauna ceremony.

The plaintiff, however, was confronted with a certain statement which he made in the Criminal Court in the month of November 1916. We may mention here that, before the present suit was filed, two cases in the Criminal Court had been brought by Gopal Das against Damodar Lal. The statement to which we are about to refer was made in the course of the trial of one of them.

At page 165 of our record there is printed Exhibit J which is a certified copy of the deposition of Gopal Das in the Court of a First Class Magistrate. At page 166 he makes certain statements regarding the loan of ornaments to Damodar Lal. In his cross-examination he stated as follows:

"I lent him ornaments worth about Rs. 5,000.

'They are as follows:—

	Rs.
Bhuj set with diamonds worth ..	2,000
Buttons set with diamond worth ..	1,000
Chain set with emerald and rubies ...	2,000

When he was making this statement on the 17th November 1916 Damodar Lal at first stated that he had lent these ornaments four years previously. He then corrected himself and stated that the ornaments had been lent on two occasions. He said that they had at first been lent on the occasion of the marriage of the two boys, that they had been returned to him and that they were again lent on the occasion of the gauna.

It is obvious, therefore, that this statement does not fit in with the statement made by the plaintiff in the trial in this case. There he mentioned three items of ornaments only which had been lent and which had not been returned.

The value of those ornaments he gave as Rs. 5,000. Here he is referring to a larger list of ornaments the value of which he states to be Rs. 8,000.

We have satisfied ourselves by an examination of the evidence on the record that, although the claim of the plaintiff in respect of these ornaments is not established, he has nevertheless succeeded in showing that the ornaments to which we have just referred and which the witness mentioned in the course of his deposition in the Criminal Court were, as a matter of fact, lent to the defendant No. 2.

We have in this connection to refer to a letter which seems to us to really set the matter at rest. That letter is Exhibit 25, which is printed at page 155 of the record. We may say that there are one or two other letters referred to in which reference is made to certain ornaments but this letter which we are now discussing is the only one of which it can be said definitely, that it contains a reference to specific articles such as those which are mentioned by the plaintiff in his plaint.

We extract the following passage from this letter, Exhibit 25, which was sent on the 30th October 1915 by the second defendant to the plaintiff's wife:—

"The other ornaments are at Kashi which will be redeemed but the Delhi ornaments, namely, two armlets (bhuj-do) one chain and eight buttons are not traceable. So you can take the adequate amount in respect of the same."

This, in our opinion, is a distinct admission of liability on the part of the second defendant for the value of the ornaments so mentioned and we have no doubt whatever that to this extent the story of the plaintiff is true and that he lent to the defendants the two armlets, the chain and the eight buttons which are said to have been set with diamonds.

We wish to remark here that the translation of this letter, Exhibit 25, as it appears on the printed record, is altogether misleading and erroneous and that it has been necessary for us to have the version corrected in order to enable us to decide the case properly.

We have it, therefore, that this document of 30th October 1915 contains an admission of liability in respect to these articles. The suit was brought on the 29th October 1918 which was within three years from the date of the acknowledgment. The only question that remains, therefore, is whether these articles were lent to the second defendant within three years of the 30th October 1915.

The story of the defendant regarding the marriage of his son and his nephew was to the following effect:—(see page 65) "The marriage of my nephew (brother's son) took place in the month of Phagan Sambat 1968, and the marriage of my son took place in the month of Chait Sambat 1969. The gauna ceremony of both of them took place in the following winter, that is, within a year."

We gather from this statement of the defendant, therefore, that the gauna ceremony of these two boys took place between the month of October 1912 and the month of March 1913. The plaintiff, on the other hand, has assigned the month of February 1915 as the date of the gauna.

We are in this matter disposed to accept the evidence of the plaintiff in preference to that of the defendant but in any case it appears to us that the gauna ceremony must have taken place some time within three years preceding the 30th October 1915 the date on which this acknowledgment was given.

It need not be supposed that we are willing to attach much credit to the statement of Damodar Lal. We have not the slightest doubt that he perjured himself freely in the witness-box. We have not the slightest doubt that these ornaments were borrowed and conclusive proof of this is to be found in the letter Exhibit 25.

It appears to us, therefore, that this portion of the claim, that is to say, the claim relating to the two armlets, the chain and the eight diamond buttons is within limitation, time being saved by the acknowledgment contained in the letter of 30th October 1915.

The statement of the plaintiff is, that these particular ornaments were worth the sum of Rs. 5,000 and there is nothing to contradict this. In the circumstances, we consider that the valuation which is put by the plaintiff on these articles ought to be accepted.

There are one or two other matters which perhaps call for some consideration but which really do not effect the decision of the case. The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that a payment by way of interest of a sum of Rs. 175 had been made to him in the month of June 1915 and he relied on that payment for the purpose of extending limitation.

We need only say regarding this part of the case that the plantiff has failed to establish that any such payment was made to him by way of interest. What does appear from the evidence is that a certain sum of money was sent by the second defendant to the plaintiff's father-in law for the purpose of discharging a certain debt. The father-in-law made over the money to the plaintiff who thereupon appropriated a sum of Rs. 175 and applied it in the discharge of a debt which was due from himself. There can be no possible plea that this payment was made by the defendant by way of interest.

Another plea was taken by the plaintiff for the purpose of extending limitation. He alleged that by arrangement with the defendant No. 2 he occupied a certain house of the defendants on the understanding that the rent was to be Rs. 10 a month and that this rent was to be applied in reduction of the interest owing on the debt due to the plaintiff by the defendant No. 2. This part of the case has also failed for we find no reliable evidence of any such agreement between the parties.

We now come to the end of the case, and our finding, therefore, is that the appeal ought to be allowed to the extent which we have already indicated. We, therefore, accept the appeal and, setting aside the decree of the Court below, direct that a decree be given to the plaintiff against both defendants for the return of the three ornaments which are specified in list B attached to the plaint: in case the ornaments are not returned the plaintiff will be entitled to a decree for Rs. 5,000 (rupees five thousand) with proportionate costs in the Court below and in this Court including fees on the higher scale. We fix a period of one month from the date of this Court's decree for the return of the ornaments to the plaintiff; in default of their return within the time allowed the plaintiff will be entitled to execute the decree for Rs. 5,000.

As regards the defendant's costs we think it right to say that, in view of his conduct, he is not entitled to any costs either here or in the Court below and we order accordingly.

We wish to note in conclusion that the task of trying this appeal has been rendered unusually difficult on account of the gross inaccuracy of the translations which appear in the printed book. This is a matter which we propose to bring to the notice of the learned Chief Justice by means of a separate note.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 333 OF 1922.

March 28, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Justice Moti Sagar.

Musammat AISHIA BI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Musammat SUGHRA JAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 31—Appeal—Judgment of Appellate Court, contents of—Reasons for judgment—Duty of Appellate Court.

The Judge of an Appellate Court should state his own reasons for the conclusion at which he has arrived and should not confine himself to approving the reasons of the Court of first instance. A general and wholesale adoption of the judgment of the Court of first instance cannot be considered as a sufficient compliance with the law. [p. 1014, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Delhi, dated the 2nd November 1921, confirming that of the Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated the 20th May 1919.

Mr. Abdur Rashid, for the Appellant.

Lala Devi Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case giving rise to this second appeal are fully stated in the judgment of the learned District Judge dated the 27th May 1920 and need not be repeated here at length. Briefly stated, they are as follows:—

On the 31st October 1917 one Musammat Sughra Jan acting on her own behalf and on behalf of her minor daughter, Musammat Sardar Begam, sold one-fourth share of a house in Kishan Ganj at Delhi to one Abdul Razzak, her own father, for a sum of Rs. 500. This sale gave rise to two suits. One was a suit brought by Musammat Aishan Bi the present plaintiff, for pre-emption of the house sold by the mother for herself and for her minor daughter, while the other was a suit by Musammat Sardar Begam, the minor daughter of Musammat Sughra Jan, for a declaration that the sale by her mother did not affect the share of the plaintiff. Musammat Sardar Begam's case was decreed, and it was held that the sale was fictitious and that it was not binding against her rights. The other suit for pre-emption was dismissed, it having been found that the whole sale was a fictitious one. Against this decision in the pre-emption suit an appeal was preferred to the District Judge and it was contended that the suit ought to have been decreed, at least qua the share of Musammat Sughra Jan, the mother of the minor Musammat Sardar Begam, which was valid in every respect. The learned District Judge dismissed the appeal holding that the judgment of the First Court was not perverse, and that it should be maintained as it was based on evidence. A second appeal was preferred to the High Court against this decision, and the judgment of the learned District Judge was set aside by Mr. Justice Wilberforce on the 6th June 1921 on the ground that the said judgment was not in accordance with law. The case was accordingly remanded to the lower Appellate Court, and the learned District Judge was directed to record a proper judgment on the materials before him. The learned District Judge has now recorded a fresh decision and has again dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff has again come up in second appeal to this Court. It appears that the learned District Judge has again failed to record a proper judgment and has not applied his mind to the case. His finding is to the following effect ;—

"The lower Court's finding was emphatic. The Sub-Judge had no doubt that the sale was a sham one and after I had heard arguments when the appeal was before me last year and read the evidence referred to by the learned Pleaders, I inclined to the Sub-Judge's view."

"The Sub-Judge had before him the documentary evidence that money had been paid before the Sub-Registrar and could appreciate the other circumstances in favour of the plaintiff and weigh them against the defendant's oral evidence. He was satisfied beyond doubt that the oral evidence was true. It must have been exceptionally convincing and an Appellate Court which does not hear the evidence is not so well-qualified to judge of its value."

"I cannot say that I am convinced that the lower Court's finding was wrong."

It appears from these observations that the learned Judge has mechanically adopted the view of the Court of first instance and has not given an independent finding of his own on the evidence produced by the parties in this case. There is abundant authority for holding that the Judge of an Appellate Court should state his own reasons for the case and should not confine himself to approving the reasons of the Court of first instance. A general and wholesale adoption of the judgment of the Court of first instance cannot be considered as a sufficient compliance with the law and I am, therefore, compelled to remand the case again to the learned District Judge for a fresh decision of the appeal on the merits and to direct that he shall exercise his own discrimination in deciding the points in dispute instead of generally adopting the judgment of the Trial Court. Costs to be costs in the cause.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the firm of Vishindas Nihalchand.

Mr. P. S. Shahani, for Nazarali Samji.

JUDGMENT.—These two connected appeals arise out of a suit filed by the plaintiff Nazarali against the firm of Vishindas Nihalchand for an account of the business done by them through the defendants as his commission agents.

The defendants submitted an account of their dealings between the parties with their written statement and claimed that a sum of Rs. 1,561-8-6 was, on the contrary, due to them for which they claimed a decree but paid no Court-fee thereon.

The Court settled the following issues:—

1. When did the account end?
2. Can defendants claim any amount from the plaintiff without payment of Court-fee?

3. On the accounts what is due from either party to the other?

4. General.

The plaintiff was not called upon to file objections to the account submitted by the defendants.

By consent of parties, Issues Nos. 1 and 3 were referred to the Court Commissioner, Issues Nos. 2 and 4 being reserved for arguments after the Commissioner's report was submitted. Before the Court Commissioner the plaintiff denied that he had authorized the contracts in respect of (a) the sale and purchase of 125 tons of wheat September 1916 valda (b) the purchase of 50 tons of barley July 1916 vafda and (c) the purchase of 75 bales cotton January 1917 valda. He accordingly objected to the debit entries of Rs. 1,857 for loss on wheat and Rs. 180 for loss on barley and claimed credit for Rs. 2,362-8-0 as profit on the uncovered contracts of sale of 75 bales of cotton. He also claimed credit for a small item of Rs. 50-0-0 alleged to have been short accounted for which has been disallowed and is not now in dispute.

The Court Commissioner found that both the sale and purchase contracts of wheat as also the contracts for purchase of 50 bales out of the 75 bales of cotton were unauthorized, that the contract of 50 tons barley was authorized. On an adjustment of the accounts in view of his findings he held that the plaintiff was entitled to a decree for Rs. 1,265-2-6 and interest thereon.

The learned Judicial Commissioner who heard the objections has confirmed the report of the Commissioner. Both parties have appealed.

The chief dispute between the parties was whether certain contracts were authorized or not.

This was a question for the Trying Court to decide and not a question which could be referred to a Commissioner for taking accounts under O. XXVI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code. The defendants were at fault in not moving the Court to call upon the plaintiff to file objections to the account and to determine such of the objections as did not relate to the examination and adjustment of the account before referring the accounts to the Court Commissioner. The learned Judicial Commissioner who heard the objections to the Commissioner's report has rightly pointed out that, though the procedure which the parties have chosen to adopt has had the effect of making the Official Commissioner as a sort of Sub-Judge, the report of the Commissioner can only be treated as evidence before the Trying Court. In dealing with the merits of the objections to the Commissioner's report the learned Judicial Commissioner has, however, said that he must accept the report as it stands unless it is clearly shown by either of the objectors that the Official Commissioner has acted in some irregular manner or that his finding is in no way supportable by the evidence before him. To such a broad proposition I respectfully demur. As said by Hill Justice in R. M. S. Chetty v. Mahomed Essa Saheb (1) the proceedings of a Commissioner are an inquiry for the information of the Court and not a trial. If the Commissioner finds a fact, his finding is not a decision upon it.

To hold that the finding of a Commissioner on a question of fact decided by him must be accepted as it stands unless he is shown to have acted in an irregular manner, or that his findings are in no way supportable by evidence, would practically be giving more weight to his decision than to a judgment of the Court of the first instance, and treating the objections to a Commissioner's report on the same level as an application for revision or second appeal on findings of fact, and virtually to place the finding of fact of a Commissioner on the same footing as the verdict of a Jury. It has not been contended by the parties in the Court below or before us that the consent order had the effect of an agreement by the parties to decide all questions of fact between them, as in the case of Watson v. Aga Mehadee Sherazee (2) wherein a suit for an account the parties had expressly agreed that the cause should be referred to the Commissioner who on taking the account was to decide "all questions of fact, whether as to delivery of merchandise, of the value of such merchandise delivered or otherwise with full power for the purposes of investigation and that if questions of law should arise and could not be settled or disposed of before the Commissioner, they were to be submitted to the Court," and where their Lordships held, that the reference to the Commissioner in that case was quite different from a reference under Art. 181 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859.

(1) 5 C. W. N. 692 at p. 707.

(2) 1 I. A. 346; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 384 (P. C.).

In dealing with the objections of the parties to the Commissioner's report we have, as a Court of Appeal, to deal with them on matters of fact and not only on questions of principle. I shall, therefore, deal with the objections on the merits.

[Note:—The rest of the judgment discusses facts and is, therefore, omitted.—Ed.]

Property belonging to plaintiff, which was subject to a mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 was sold to the first defendant; and the latter first mortgaged it to the plaintiff and later on sold it to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who undertook in the sale-deed to pay the mortgage amount due to the plaintiff. In a suit by the plaintiff on his mortgages defendants Nos. 2 and 3 pleaded in respect of their own mortgage priority over the plaintiff's:

Per Krishnan, J.—If a person buys property over which he has a mortgage himself and the mortgage in consequence becomes discharged by merger or by the terms of the sale he can nevertheless use that mortgage as a shield against any puisne incumbrancer who attempts to enforce his claim against the property, unless his intention to extinguish the mortgage is clear otherwise. That is the principle of section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. The buyer cannot be credited with the intention of altogether extinguishing his mortgage for all purposes when it is found to be to his benefit to keep it alive, merely because in the deed of purchase a part of the purchase-money is treated as going in discharge of his mortgage. Whether the purchase is statedly of the whole property for a price made up of the price of the equity of redemption and of the mortgage amount or whether it is, statedly, of the equity of redemption only, the transaction is substantially the same; and as it is for his benefit to keep the first mortgage alive, one cannot necessarily assume the existence of an intention on his part to extinguish it, even in the former case. But where he expressly covenants to pay the mortgage amount of the puisne incumbrancer, the position becomes different, and he cannot afterwards deny his liability. [p. 1017, col. 1.]

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—An undertaking by a prior incumbrancer, who purchases the mortgaged property, to pay off a puisne incumbrancer, is inconsistent with an intention to keep alive his own mortgage in the sense that it is to prevail over the mortgage of the puisne incumbrancer. [p. 1019, col. 1.]

A mortgage which is dead in fact cannot be used as a shield against a subsequent incumbrance. Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act only enacts that a mortgage which in fact exists must not in law be deemed to be extinguished by reason of the merger in the same individual of the two interests, the interest of the mortgagee and the interest of the owner of the equity of redemption. But a mortgage which has become extinguished cannot, on principle, be held to spring into existence to be enforced against the puisne incumbrancer. [p. 1020, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Krishnan, J.—My learned brother has set out the facts of the case in his judgment which he is about to deliver and they need not, therefore, be repeated. I agree with him that the second appeal fails but for reasons somewhat different from his.

It seems to me clear that if a person buys property over which he has a mortgage himself and the mortgage in consequence becomes discharged by merger or by the terms of the sale-deed, he can nevertheless, use that mortgage as a shield against any puisne incumbrancer who attempts to enforce his claim against the property, unless his intention to extinguish the mortgage is clear otherwise. That is the principle of section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. The buyer cannot be credited with the intention of altogether extinguishing his mortgage for all purposes when it is found to be to his benefit to keep it alive, merely because in the deed of purchase a part of the purchase-money is treated as going in discharge of his mortgage. Whether the purchase is statedly of the whole property for a price made up of the price of the equity of redemption and of the mortgage amount or whether it is, statedly, of the equity of redemption, only, the transaction is substantially the same; and as it is for his benefit to keep the first mortgage alive we cannot necessarily assume the existence of an intention on his part to extinguish it, even in the former case. See the decision in Chidambara Nadan v. Musuvathi Muni Nagendrayyan (1). The puisne mortgagee loses nothing by the first mortgage being used as a shield as he bargained only for a right subject to the first mortgage and there is no reason why his right should be enlarged because the prior mortgagee purchases the property. In the present case, therefore, I should have been prepared to hold that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had not lost their right to plead their first mortgage under Exhibit I as against the plaintiff but for the covenant in their deed of purchase, Exhibit III, whereby they expressly undertook to pay off the whole of the plaintiff's mortgage amount. That, I think, makes the difference in this case.

Having covenanted to pay the plaintiff's mortgage amount themselves it is not open to them to deny their liability. It was contended that plaintiff cannot take advantage of the covenant in Exhibit III as she was no party to it and reference was made to Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (2), a decision of the Privy Council. This might be so; but the first defendant with whom the covenant was made and who is entitled to enforce it, is a party to this suit and has asked the Court to enforce it by making defendants Nos. 2 and 3 pay the plaintiff's mortgage amount themselves by sale of Item No. 1 free of incumbrances. I do not see why that claim should not be enforced in this suit. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have no answer to that claim. It was argued that first defendant should be left to sue for damages for breach of covenant if he suffers any injury by reason of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 not paying off the plaintiff's mortgage. He will, no doubt, have a right to sue for damages but that is not a reason why in this suit itself when the parties are all before us their rights should not be adjusted. There is no necessity to drive the first defendant to a separate suit for damages. I would, therefore, in enforcement of the covenant between the first defendant and defendants Nos. 2 and 3, direct that Item No. 1 be sold free of any claims by the latter under their mortgage; and on that reason I would support the decree of the lower Appellate Court.

4. A somewhat similar case arose in Govindaswami Thevan v. Doraiswami Pillai (3) where a person purchased property subject to two mortgages and covenanted with the vendor that he would pay off both mortgages. He paid off the first mortgage but not the second. In a suit by the second mortgagee he pleaded the first mortgage he had paid off as a shield against the plaintiff but his plea was disallowed. The learned Judges have based their judgment on the view that as the first mortgage had been paid off in pursuance of a covenant to discharge it, it could not be treated as alive for any purpose or used as a shield. Whether this is the right view to take or not, I am inclined to think that the decision is clearly right though I should be inclined to put it on the ground above stated that the covenant by the vendee with the mortgagor-vendor to pay off the second mortgage could be enforced in the second mortgagee's suit, where all the parties are before the Court; and consequently the first mortgagee cannot be allowed to plead his mortgage as a shield.

For the above reasons, I agree that the second appeal should be dismissed with costs of the plaintiff.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I shall state very briefly the facts material for the decision of the question involved in this second appeal. The plaintiff was originally the owner of the suit item with which we are concerned. She executed a mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and it is evidenced by Exhibit I dated 10th July 1904. The plaintiff then sold the property to the first defendant by Exhibit II dated 8th August 1906 subject to the mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The effect of these two transactions may be shortly stated to be that the second and third defendants acquired a mortgage right in respect of a property of which the owner was the first defendant, and for the purpose of deciding the question at issue we must have regard to this result, and a separate consideration of each of these two transactions as distinct from and unconnected with the other is not called for. Then we come to the third transaction, namely, the creation of a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff by the first defendant, Exhibit C dated 16th August 1906. The suit out of which the second appeal has arisen was based upon this mortgage. Fourthly, the first defendant sold the property to the second defendant for the benefit of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 subject to the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. This sale is evidenced by Exhibit III dated 23rd February 1914.

What is the net result of these transactions? We may start with the first defendant as the owner of the property. There is a first mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The first defendant then executed a second mortgage in favour of the plaintiff. Finally, the first defendant sold the property to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 (I already stated that the sale in favour of the second defendant was for the benefit of defendants Nos. 2 and 3) subject to the mortgage in the plaintiff's favour.

The plaintiff instituted this suit on her mortgage. The second and third defendants pleaded in respect of their own mortgage priority over the mortgage of the plaintiff. The question to be decided is have they such priority?

Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act runs as follows: "Where the owner of a charge or other encumbrance on immoveable property is or becomes absolutely entitled to that property, the charge or encumbrance shall be extinguished, unless he declares, by express words or necessary implication, that it shall continue to subsist, or such continuance would be for his benefit."

According to this section, as the continuance of the encumbrance would be for the benefit of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, the mortgage in their favour would continue to subsist unless there is evidence of an intention to extinguish such mortgage. We must turn to Exhibit III, the deed of sale dated 23rd February 1914, to find out what the intention of the parties was. It recites that the consideration for the sale is Rs. 3,400 and that it is made up in the following manner:—(1) Rs. 1,500, retained with the purchaser (the second defendant or practically defendants Nos. 2 and 3) being the amount due to the plaintiff under the hypothecation bond dated 16th August 1906 (Exhibit C); (2) Rs. 800 the amount received in cash by the first defendant the seller; and (3) Rs. 1,100 the amount agreed by this deed to be the equivalent of the mortgage dated 10th July 1904 (Exhibit I) in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

In the first place, it is to be observed that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have undertaken by this document to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,500 due in respect of her mortgage. Is this undertaking consistent with an intention to keep alive their own mortgage in the sense that it is to prevail over the mortgage of the plaintiff? I have no doubt that they are not entitled to enforce the mortgage in their favour as against the plaintiff. Let me take a very simple example. A property is mortgaged in favour of A to secure a sum of Rs. 100. B. takes a second mortgage over the same property for the sum of Rs. 200. A finally purchases the property subject to the two mortgages for Rs. 50. If B sues for the recovery of Rs. 200 and the property is found worth Rs. 300 or more, no question of priority arises, as the property is sufficient to discharge both the mortgages. But, if the property realises less than Rs. 300, the question becomes material. Is the mortgage in favour of A subsisting or is it extinguished? Ordinarily, he will be entitled to say that the mortgage in his favour is subsisting. (Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act). If the property, for instance, realises only Rs. 100 A will be entitled to claim that sum in discharge of his own prior encumbrance. But, supposing that the sale-deed in favour of A contains a covenant by A to pay B the full amount of Rs. 200, how can then A say that he is still entitled to priority? It is that very right to priority that is destroyed by the covenant. It has been suggested that all that A undertakes is, that he renders himself liable to pay B Rs. 200 in the event of the security being found sufficient to pay both the mortgages. To me this argument seems absolutely untenable. As I already observed, if the security realises a sum sufficient to pay both the mortgages, B will be paid his Rs. 200, as a matter of course. Then, where is the need for a special covenant? The covenant becomes relevant only when the security is found insufficient.

The second and third defendants have undertaken to pay the plaintiff Rs. 1,500. The undertaking is absolute. They have not said that they will be liable to pay Rs. 1,500 only in the event of the security being found sufficient to pay off both the mortgages. The competition is only between the plaintiff on the one hand and the second and third defendants on the other. The second and third defendants entered into the covenant that, notwithstanding that the law favours them in this competition they will allow the plaintiff to take precedence of them. There is no third party involved. The contest is merely between the plaintiff on the one hand and the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 on the other. If the plaintiff is to have her entire Rs. 1,500, no question of priority can possibly arise. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 having agreed to pay her that sum, they must be deemed to have clearly intended that the mortgage in their favour should be extinguished. Of the cases cited, the only case that has a bearing upon this question is Govindaswami Thevan v. Doraiswami Pillai (3), and the view that I have taken is consistent with the principle underlying this decision.

Apart from this, I am prepared to hold, on a construction of Exhibit III, that the prior mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, Exhibit I, was agreed to be treated as discharged. If the prior mortgage is discharged by payment in full, no further question can arise. What difference does it make that the creditor has waived a portion of the amount due to him and has agreed to treat the mortgage in his favour as completely discharged? I am prepared to go even further. Suppose the purchaser, the prior mortgagee, agrees with the seller, the mortgagor, to forego the entire amount and treat the mortgage as discharged what difference does it make? Whether the mortgage is discharged by payment in full or by an agreement between the parties, the result is the same, and the mortgage becomes extinguished. When the mortgage is discharged or is extinguished no further question of subrogation can arise. In the course of the argument it was suggested by Mr. Seshagiri Sastri, the learned Vakil for defendants Nos. 2 and 3, that the agreement to discharge may be effective as between the mortgagor and the mortgagee; but it can have no force as against the puisne encumbrancer. I fail to see how a mortgage dead in fact can be used as a shield against the subsequent encumbrancer. All that section 101 enacts is that a mortgage which in fact exists must not in law be deemed to be extinguished by reason of the merger in the same individual of the two interests, the interest of the mortgagee and the interest of the owner of the equity of redemption. To say that a mortgage which has become extinguished springs into existence to be enforced against the puisne encumbrancer is opposed to principle and there is nothing in the section, which lends support to such a view.

I find in the terms of the deed, Exhibit III, sufficient indication of a discharge of the prior mortgage in favour of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The Rs. 1,100 the third item of the consideration, is described in the deed to be "the equivalent of" the mortgage dated 10th July 1904. If this rendering is correct there is a complete discharge. But, a rival translation was suggested, namely, that the tamil words only mean "on account of" and not "as an equivalent of." Even if this meaning be adopted, I am still of the opinion that the mortgage was treated as completely discharged. It is extremely improbable that, if the purchaser intended that his prior encumbrance should be kept alive to any extent, he would pay to the seller in cash Rs. 800. Any balance payable to the seller would have been set off against the amount due on the footing of the mortgage. As a matter of fact, there is no dispute that, to the extent of Rs. 1,100, at any rate, there was no actual payment but there was merely an adjustment. Then, again, it must be remembered that the sum of Rs. 1,100 represents the principal and the interest upon it at 27½ per cent. The rate of interest provided for in Exhibit I is 75 per cent. There is nothing unlikely in the second and third defendants having agreed to forego a portion of this exorbitant interest. The amount actually received by them included interest calculated, as pointed out, at 27½ per cent. a rate quite high. In the circumstances, I also hold on a construction of Exhibit III that the second and third defendants agreed to treat the mortgage, Exhibit I, in their favour as completely discharged.

The result is that the second appeal fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. IX, r. 13—Application to set aside ex parte decree—Error of law—Revision—High Court, power of, to interfere.

In an application to set aside an ex parte decree the burden of proving want of knowledge of the decree within thirty days of the application lies on the applicant, and where a District Judge on appeal against an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree misunderstands and misapplies the law he commits a material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code, and his order is liable to be set aside on revision. JUDGMENT.—The preliminary objection is raised that there should be no interference in revision since an erroneous order setting aside a decree ex parte can be attacked in appeal against any subsequent decree that might be passed. This objection is effectively disposed of by three rulings of the Punjab Chief Court, Manohar Lal v. Sadiqa Begam (1), Fazal v. Hashmati (2) and Sughru Mal-Harcharan Das v. Sham Lal-Gokal Chand (3).

In the first case a Division Bench ruled that in an application to have an ex parte decree set aside where the lower Court fails to determine an essential point of limitation the omission amounts to a material irregularity and a revision is competent.

In Fazal v. Hashmati (2) it was held by a Single Judge that an error made by a Court in setting aside an ex parte decree is not an error affecting the decision of the case within the meaning of section 105 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In Sughru Mal-Harcharan Das v. Sham Lal-Gokal Chand (3) it was ruled, also by a Single Judge, that in an application to set aside an ex parte decree the burden of proving want of knowledge of the decree within 30 days of the application is on the applicant and where a District Judge on appeal against an order refusing to set aside an ex parte decree has misunderstood and misapplied the law he has committed a material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction.

The history of the present case is as follows:—An ex parte decree was passed on the 30th of August 1921. The judgment-debtors, Gopi Ram-Ram Chand, applied on the 13th of February 1922 for an order setting aside the ex parte decree, alleging that they had become aware of the decree two or three days before the date of their application. The application was not supported by affidavit. Notice issued to the decree-holders who appeared on the 16th of March 1922 and the 31st of March 1922 was fixed for the evidence of the applicants. On the 31st of March 1922 the applicants' Counsel stated that he had no evidence to produce.

The First Court dismissed the application holding, inter alia, that it was barred by time. Appeal was made to the Senior Subordinate Judge who reversed the decision of the lower Court and set aside the ex parte decree. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge decided that the defendants had not been served with summons for the suit as required by law. He did not touch the question of whether the application to set aside the ex parte decree had been presented in time.

Obviously, he was wrong and, obviously, the defendants who made no affidavit and produced no evidence, have failed to discharge the onus which lay upon them of establishing that their application was within time. Furthermore, there is indication that they did have knowledge of the suit, if not of the decree On the 26th of August 1921 on the application of the plaintiffs a telegram was sent to the defendants directing them to appear in Court on the 30th of August. The fact of this telegram being sent and received was not denied by the defendant in his grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. He mentioned it as having been sent and complained that the order contained in it was not warranted and was illegal.

I accept the petition, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss with costs throughout the petition for setting aside the ex parte.

JAGDIP PRASAD SAHI—DEFENDANT AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENTS.

Principal and agent—Several principals—Agent, when can get valid discharge—Demand for accounts by principals individually—Refusal by agent—Limitation, commencement of—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 38, application of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 89, application of.

An agent cannot get a valid discharge by accounting to one of several co-principals. Such a case is not covered by section 38 of the Contract Act. [p. 1023, cols. 1 & 2.]

Hatsall v. Griffith, (1834) 2 C. & M. 679; 149 E. R. 933; 4 Tyr. 487; 3 L. J. Ex. 191, referred to.

The limitation for a suit by several co-principals for accounts against the agent, where although each of the principals has severally called upon the agent to render account and been refused, the co-principals have never jointly called upon the agent to account to them, begins to run from the date of the termination of the agency and not from the date of the agent's refusal. Article 89 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act has no application to such a case [p. 1024, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Muzaffarpur, dated the 15th July 1920.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—These analogous appeals arise out of a suit instituted by Musammat Rajo Kuer and Musammat Shampati Kuer for accounts as against Jagdip Prasad Sahi.

On the 13th December 1912 the plaintiffs executed an am-mukhtarnama in favour of Jagdip Prasad Sahi. They stated in that document that it was necessary in order to preserve the property to appoint a competent and conscientious person to manage their estate and accordingly they appointed the defendant as their agent to look after their properties In the first paragraph they provided that the agent would pay Government Revenue and the rent payable to the superior landlords. In the second paragraph they provided that the agent should take proper steps for the collection of rent due to them. In the fifth paragraph they say as follows:

"He shall from time to time pay to us in equal halves year after year a certain sum for our personal expenses and house repairs, etc. He shall pay exclusively to me, Musammat Rajo Kuer, the entire income of the share of Mauza Pagra Mahisuri Jalkar Ghatam Nadi Bulan Prgana Sarisa, Tauzi No. 4377-16 Thana and Sub-Registry Dalsing Sarai, District Darbhanga. I, Musammat Shampati Kuer, neither have, nor can have, nor shall have anything to do with the income and share of the said Mauza."

In the ninth paragraph they provided that the agent shall receive as his remuneration five per cent. of the amount realised by him, "out of the income in cash or kind of our estate and out of the money payable to us by the debtor." This mukhtarnama, as I have said, was executed on the 13th December 1912. It is stated in the plaint that the plaintiff No. 1 terminated the agency on 5th February 1919 and that plaintiff No. 2 terminated the agency on the 19th January 1917. The defendant not having rendered any account to the plaintiffs the suit out of which these appeals arise was instituted on the 19th September 1919 for an account from the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that Musammat Rajo Kuer has discharged the defendant from accounting to her and that she is not entitled to an account from the defendant. Musammat Rajo Kuer being aggrieved by the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge has appealed to this Court and her appeal is Appeal No. 5 of 1921. So far as Musammat Shampati Kuer is concerned the learned Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion that the defendant did not render an account to her and that she is entitled to an account from the defendant. The defendant appeal from that portion of the judgment which is against him and his appeal is First Appeal No. 193 of 1920.

In my opinion the appeal of the defendant ought to be dismissed. Mr. Hassan Imam contended before us that the mukhtarnama in favour of the defendant was a joint mukhtarnama and that upon the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the defendant rendered an account to Musammat Rajo Kuer and that Musammat Rajo Kuer gave a complete discharge to the defendant, it must follow, so it was argued by Mr. Hassan Imam, that the liability of the defendant is at an end. The argument was developed to-day by Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha who places considerable reliance upon section 38 of the Indian Contract Act. Section 38 of the Indian Contract Act provides that :—

"Where a promisor has made an offer of performance to the promisee, and the offer has not been accepted, the promisor is not responsible for non-performance, nor does he thereby lose his rights under the contract" and it also provides that an offer to one of several joint promisees has the same legal consequences as an offer to all of them.

The question whether a discharge by one of two joint creditors operates as a complete discharge under section 38 of the Indian Contract Act has been debated in different Courts and there is a considerable divergence of opinion on this important topic. But it seems to me that the question which has been argued before us is not one under section 38 of the Indian Contract Act. I will assume for the purpose of this decision that one of two joint creditors can give a valid discharge to a debtor so as to completely bind the other joint creditor. But the liability of an agent to account is not a liability that arises by virtue of a contract between the parties but is a liability that is annexed by law to the office of the agent. Therefore, it seems to me that we have nothing whatever to do with section 38 of the Indian Contract Act.

So far as the liability of an agent to account to joint principals is concerned, the authorities are unanimous that an agent cannot get a discharge by accounting to only one of two co-principals. The position is put in this form in Halsbury's Laws of England: "Co-principals may jointly appoint an agent to act for them and in such case become jointly liable to him, and may jointly sue him. The agent is not bound to account separately to one of several co-principals and if he has done so is not thereby discharged from liability to the other or others unless the co-principals are also partners." (Vol. I, page 159, paragraph 347). At page 187 the proposition is put in this form—"Where the monies are received on behalf of joint principals, the agent is liable to account to them jointly, and is not discharged by payment to one or more of them only, unless by authority of all." Two cases are relied upon as authorities in support of the propositions which are laid down in the passages to which I have already referred. The first of these cases is the case of Hatsall v. Griffith (1). That was a case in which two persons, Brown and Prothero on their behalf and on behalf of Hatsall, the plaintiff, employed the defendant as an agent to sell a ship in which they were all interested. The defendant sold the ship and paid over to Brown and Prothero their proportionate share of the purchase-money; but he refused to make over the share of the plaintiff except on a joint receipt by all of them. His refusal to account to the plaintiff was upheld by the Court on the ground that he was not bound to account to only one of the co-principals. Baron Alderson put the point very clearly in these words.—"The want of the joint concurrence of the three appear to have been the ground of the defendant's refusal to pay." It follows from this decision that in order to give a discharge to an agent there must be a joint concurrence of all the principals and where such a joint concurrence is wanting there is in point of law no discharge at all. The other case is reported in Lee v. Sankey (2). In that case two trustees employed a firm of Solicitors to receive the proceeds of the testator's real estate. The Solicitors paid over the money to one only of such trustees without the receipt or authority of the other.

(2) (1873) 15 Eq. 204; 27 L. T. 809; 21 W. R. 286.

JAGDIP PRASAD v. RAJO KUER.

It was argued on behalf of the Solicitors that a discharge by one of the trustees operated as a complete discharge and was completely binding on the other trustees. The Court came to the conclusion that the receipt of one trustee was not a sufficient discharge to the Solicitors for the money which they had received by the authority of the two and that they were personally liable to make good the loss which had resulted to the trust estate. In my opinion these cases are conclusive on the point which has been argued before us. I must accordingly hold that the discharge by Musammat Rajo Kuer did not absolve the appellant from accounting to his principals jointly.

It was next argued that the suit is barred by limitation. The Mukhtarnama, as I have already stated, was executed on the 13th December 1912. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha argues before us that upon the evidence of Musammat Rajo Kuer there was a demand for account and a refusal to render account in January 1914 and that accordingly time began to run from January 1914. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha states before us that there is evidence on the record that each of the two ladies called upon the defendant to account each of them. But he concedes that there is no evidence whatever that the two ladies jointly called upon the defendant to account to them. In my opinion, upon the authorities which I have already discussed, the question of limitation must be answered in favour of the plaintiffs. It is sufficient to say that the defendant was not bound to account to the principals separately and that the principals acting separately could not have given a valid discharge to the defendant. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha puts his case on the terms of Art. 89 of the Limitation Act which provides that a principal has three years to bring a suit for account from the time when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha argues that, it being admitted by Musammat Rajo Kuer that there was a demand for account and a refusal to render account in January 1914 the time, so far as she is concerned, began to run in January 1914, and that, so far as Shampati Kuer is concerned, time began to run at the end of each year when she is alleged to have made a demand for account, a demand which was not complied with by the defendant. The argument in my opinion is wholly inadmissible. The ladies could not have maintained separate suits, each on her own account. It may be that if Musammt Rajo Kuer were entitled to maintain a suit for account on her own behalf such a suit is barred by limitation. It may also be that if Musammat Shampati Kuer were entitled to maintain a suit for account on her own behalf that suit is barred by limitation. But we are not in this litigation concerned with any suit that might have been brought either by Musammat Rajo Kuer or by Musammat Shampati Kuer. This is a suit by Musammat Rajo Kuer and Musammat Shampati Kuer jointly and to such a suit it is clearly no answer to say that, so far as Musammat Rajo Kuer is concerned, if she had filed a suit on her own behalf, that suit would have been barred by limitation and that, so far as Shampati Kuer is concerned, if she had brought a suit on her own account, that suit would have been barred by limitation. This is a joint suit by the two ladies and there is no evidence that there was a joint demand for an account by the two ladies. In my opinion time began to run from the termination of the agency and it is conceded that time having begun to run from the termination of the agency the suit is well within time.

The last point which has been argued before us is that the agent should not be called upon to account for zirait lands and kasht lands. Mr. Hassan Imam informed us yesterday that there was nothing in this point. But his learned junior has pressed this point before us with great vehemence. Having considered the point we are bound to agree with the view which was taken by Mr. Hassan Imam, namely, that there is nothing at all in this point. The learned Vakil argues that there is nothing at all in the Mukhtarnama which provides that the agent was to be in charge of kasht lands or zirait lands. Conceding that there is nothing in the Mukhtarnama to support the contention of the plaintiffs, it is equally clear that there is nothing in the mukhtarnama which supports the contention of the learned Vakil for the defendant that the agent was not to be put in charge of the kashit lands and zirait lands. As a matter of fact, there is indication in the Mukhtarnama that the agent was to be in charge of property yielding rent in kind and also that he was to be in possession of kasht lands. In the first paragraph of the Mukhtarnama it is provided that the agent should pay the rent of the kasht land in the possession of the plaintiffs to the landlord. It is argued that, although there was a duty upon him to pay the rent due to superior landlords, there was absolutely no duty on him to look after the kasht lands. It appears that the agent has in his account debited the plaintiffs with the rent which he has from time to time paid to the landlord but has not credited the plaintiffs with the profits of the kasht lands. In my opinion it is impossible to take the view that, although the agent was to pay the rent due to superior landlord he was to have nothing whatever to do with those lands. The ninth paragaraph of the Mukhtarnama provides in distinct terms that the agent should get as his remuneration for his work 5 per cent. of the amount realised by him out of the income in cash and kind. It is very ingeniously argued by the learned Vakil that the income in kind referred to in paragraph 9 is the income derivable from bhauli land and not from kasht land. I am unable to agree with this contention, especially as there is nothing in the Mukhtarnama to exclude the view that the agent was to be put in charge of all the properties that belonged to the plaintiffs. It is admitted by the learned Vakil that there are no documents in his favour. It is admitted by him that the evidence which has been adduced on behalf of the plaintiff does not support him. The learned Vakil has, however, referred us to a passage in the evidence of Musammat Shampati Kuer at page 34 of the paper-book. She distinctly states in that passage that since the appointment of Jagdip as the manager, Pandey who used to work as her zirattia has ceased to work as such. The whole of her evidence supports her case that the defendant was put in charge of kasht lands as well as zirait lands. It was then pressed before us that her previous deposition supports the case of the defendant that she had her own servants to look after the zirait land. Her previous deposition is Exhibit M. In the course of her evidence in a case between her and Musammat Rajo Kuer she stated as follows:—

"We are separate and some of lands are separate but this disputed land is joint since Chengan Sahi's death. Brahmdeo cuts crops and divides on my behalf and Maha Rudra looks after Musammat Rajo's affair. Jagdip was agent for both of us when the barley crop still lying in the field was cultivated and he cultivated it for both of us jointly."

In my opinion this evidence does not support the case of the defendant. She was undoubtedly right in so far as she stated that at the time when she was giving her evidence Brahmdeo was looking after her zirait lands and Maha Rudra was looking after her Rajo Kuer's land. But she stated very definitely that Jagdip was the agent for both when the barley crops were cultivated and that he cultivated them for both of them. Undoubtedly, since the termination of the agency of the defendant other arrangements have been made by these ladies. But it does not follow that because other arrangements were made by the ladies in 1919, that is to say, at the time when Musammat Shampati Kuer was giving her evidence in the case that that arrangement was also in existence at the time when Jagdip was the agent of the ladies. In my opinion the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, so far as Musammat Shampati Kuer is concerned, is right and must be upheld. I would accordingly dismiss First Appeal No. 193 of 1920 with costs.

I come now to Musammat Rajo Kuer's appeal and it seems to me that that appeal must be decided upon our view of law that an agent cannot discharge himself by accounting to only one of two co-principals. The finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is, not that the defendant did account to Musammat Rajo Kuer, but that Musammat Rajo Kuer in order to defeat the interest of Musammat Shampati Kuer in a threatened litigation between Musammat Rajo Kuer and Shampati

Kuer, entered into a conspiracy, for the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge comes to that, with Jagdip Prasad by which she accepted the position that Jagdip had rendered account to her. These accounts upon which reliance is placed, are Exhibits B to B-3. The accounts are headed "Accounts of Receipts and Disbursement of the estate of Musammat Rajo Kuer, Proprietores." There is no doubt whatever that a conspiracy was on foot in order to defeat the interest of Musammat Shampati Kuer and the question which we have now to consider is this whether the transaction between Musammat Rajo Kuer and Jagdip Prasad Sahi was such as now precludes Musammat Rajo Kuer from placing the true facts before the Court, and claiming an account from Jagdip Prasad Sahi. There are two questions involved in the argument a question of law and a question of fact. Now, the question of law which I have already discussed is a complete answer to the defence taken in this case. If it be the law that an agent cannot discharge himself by accounting to one of the co-principals, it must follow that the transaction between Musammat Rajo Kuer and Jagdip Prasad Sahi is wholly ineffectual so as to save the defendant from accounting to the plaintiffs as to the profits that came into his hands in the course of his agency. But, apart from any such question, it seems to me that, the truth being known to both the parties, there is no case of estoppel which would prevent Musammat Rajo Kuer from claiming account from Jagdip Prasad Sahi. Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha concedes that this is not a case of estoppel at all. But his argument is that the question being one of discharge Musammat Raja Kuer was entitled to discharge Jagdip Prasad from accounting to her. But when we are considering whether Musammat Rajo Kuer did absolve Jagdip Prsad from accounting to her we are bound to consider the case made on this point by Jagdip Prasad. Now, his case is that he took the accounts to Musammat Rajo Kuer; that he explained them to Musammat Rajo Kuer; that Musammat Rajo Kuer accepted those accounts and admitted them to be correct and that Musammat Rajo Kuer in a Mukhtarnama which she subsequently executed in favour of Maha Rudra stated very definitely that Jagdip Prasad Sahi had explained all the accounts to her and that she had accepted those accounts as correct. If there be no estoppel Musammat Rajo Kuer is entitled to say that the statements which were made by her have no foundation in fact; and the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge supports the evidence of Musammat Rajo Kuer. But the learned Subordinate Judge has taken the view that having entered into a fraudulent conspiracy she ought not to be allowed to claim an account from Jagdip Prasad. I am unable to take this view. That conspiracy was not carried into effect and no equities have arisen which would induce us to hold that Musammat Rajo Kuer is not now entitled to put the true facts before the Court. If, indeed, the conspiracy had succeeded and Musammat Shampati Kuer had been defeated in her claim no doubt it would be impossible to hold that Rajo Kuer was entitled to claim an account against Jagip. But, as I have said before, the conspiracy was not carried into effect and no equities have arisen which would prevent us from giving appropriate relief to the plaintiff. It is not the case of the defendant that Musammat Rajo Kuer gave him a complete discharge without taking any accounts from him. It would be impossible to support such a case, if such a case had been made, having regard to the fact that the dealings were between principal and agent, and that the principal was an illiterate parda nashin lady. The whole argument of Mr. Naresh Chandra Sinha is that Musammat Rajo Kuer was entitled to give a valid discharge to the agent without taking any accounts from him. It is sufficient to say that that is not the case of the defendant and that that case will not be supported in any Court of Law. The case of the defendant is, that he rendered an account to Musammat Rajo Kuer, and that Musammat Rajo Kuer gave him a discharge after accepting the accounts as correct. The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the the defendant did not render any accounts to Musammat Rajo Kuer and that the accounts Exhibits B to B-3, are not correct. It is conceded that there is no case of estoppel which would prevent Musammat Rajo Kuer from claiming an account now from the defendant. I hold that the plaintiffs are entitled to an account from the defendant. The appeal of Musammat Rajo Kuer must accordingly be allowed and she will be entitled to the general costs of the appeal, but not to a separate hearing fee.

The result is that the decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge must be varied in accordance with the judgment; and the defendants must pay the costs of the suit to the plaintiffs.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—I agree.

WASAKHI RAM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

versus

HUSSAIN KHAN AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

(Admission, value of—Consideration—Undue influence—Burden of proof.

Plaintiff sued defendant to recover a sum of money on the ground that the money had been paid to the defendant by mistake. Defendant's admission in a previous suit that he had received the money from the plaintiff was proved against him. Defendant pleaded in the present suit that he had not received the money and that the receipt executed by him in favour of the plaintiff obtained from him under undue influence;

Held, that the effect of defendant's admission in the previous suit was that the burden of proving non-receipt of the money and undue influence was shifted on to him.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 16th July 1917, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 29th January 1917.

Pandit Sheo Narain, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. Zafarullah Khan and Dr. Gokal Chand Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Badar Din was indebted to a joint Hindu family of which three members were Ladha Mal, Ganga Singh and their nephew Wasakhi Ram. In 1906 the family was partitioned and the debt of Badar Din fell to the share of Ladha Mal and Ganga Singh. In 1912 the plaintiff executed two bonds in favour of these two persons. One of the bonds was transferred to another party, Sohna Mal, who brought a suit on it against the plaintiff in January 1914. The plaintiff's plea in the suit was that he had, on the 26th June 1913, paid Rs. 2,170 to Wasakhi Ram in discharge of the debt. Wasakhi Ram as a witness supported Badar Din and admitted that he had received the money and had given Badar Din a receipt which was produced. He further applied to be made a plaintiff in the suit since he was a member of the joint Hindu family, and the question whether he was so or not was put in issue and decided against him. The result of the suit was a decree against Badar Din.

The suit from which the present second appeal has resulted was brought by Badar Din against Wasakhi Ram for the recovery of Rs. 2,170 with interest. It was dismissed by the Trial Court but on appeal the learned District Judge gave the plaintiff a decree for Rs. 2,170 without interest, and against this decision a second appeal has been preferred.

The main question at issue was, whether Badar Din had paid Wasakhi Ram Rs. 2,170 on account of a debt due by him to Ladha Mal and Ganga Singh. The lower Court found that this sum was not proved to have passed. The learned District Judge held that Wasakhi Ram's admission in the previous suit having been proved against him the burden of proving want of consideration and also of proving undue influence in regard to the execution of the receipt (which he pleaded) fell upon him, and that since he had failed to discharge the burden he was liable to pay the plaintiff's claim.

We have heard Mr. Sheo Narain in support of the appeal but we have not considered it necessary to call upon Counsel for the respondent to reply. The main contention by the learned Advocate for the appellant is, that evidence has been overlooked by the lower Appellate Court. He admits that there was a clear admission by the appellant in the previous suit, but he contends that the appellant as a defendant is now entitled to expose the real nature of the transaction between himself and the plaintiff and that evidence that no money passed and that the receipt was given simply in order to injure Ladha Mal and Ganga Singh has been disregarded.

That evidence is stated to be the depositions of Bhag Mal and of the plaintiff himself who was called as a witness by the defendant. Now, Bhag Mal's evidence is specifically referred in paragraph 4 of Badar Din's memorandum of appeal to the lower Appellate Court. He is mentioned by name in the lower Appellate Court's judgment, and the learned District Judge has recorded a definite finding that the defendant has wholly failed to establish undue influence. This is what Bhag Mal was called to establish and we have no reason for doubting that his evidence was read and considered by the learned District Judge before he came to the above finding.

In regard to the plaintiff, Mr Sheo Narain claims that an absurd story was elicited from him when he appeared in the witness-box, which showed clearly that no money could have been paid by him to Wasakhi Ram. The plaintiff's deposition is not mentioned at all by the learned District Judge but he states it as having been admitted before him that the non-passing of consideration was not proved, a matter which he made it clear had to be proved by the present appellant. This admission then, by the latter's Counsel rendered specific allusion to the plaintiff's evidence, the object of which was to prove that no consideration passed, unnecessary, and we do not think that any case has been made out for interference on second appeal on the ground of omission by the lower Appellate Court to read evidence.

The next and the only other point argued is that the payment of Rs. 2,170, it made, as alleged, by the plaintiff Badar Din, was not legally recoverable since it was not made by mistake or under coercion within the meaning of section 72 of the Indian Contract Act. This was not a point raised in the appellant's pleadings in the Trial Court. Mr. Sheo Narain contends that the plaint contained no allegation of payment by mistake and concedes that, if we hold that it did, his present objection raised in second appeal must fail. We have perused sections 4 and 5 of the plaint and, although the wording might have been more definite, we consider that there was in effect an assertion that the plaintiff had by mistake paid the money to the wrong member of the family to which he believed himself to be indebted.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

ALI AHMAD, MINOR, THROUGH AHMAD BAKHSH—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
SAID MIAN—VENDEE AND ANOTHER VENDOR—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXII, r. 2—Minor, suit instituted by, without next friend—Procedure —Practice.

O. XXXII, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code does not cover a case where a suit purports to have been instituted by a major, but it is discovered during the pendency of the suit that the plaintiff is a minor. The practice in such a case is to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor to have himself properly represented in the suit by a next friend.

Beni Ram Bhutt v. Ram Lal Dhukri, 13 C. 189 at p. 191; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 625, relied on.

Second appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 23rd December 1919, affirming that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Gujrat, dated the 9th October 1919.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellant.
Mr. Gobind Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge rejecting the plaint on the ground that it was instituted by the minor without a next friend. The suit was instituted on the 29th August 1919 and on the 9th October 1919, the date fixed for hearing, the defendant appeared and pleaded that the plaintiff could not sue as he had agreed to the transaction out of which the suit arose. He made no application under O. XXXII, r. 2 (1), Civil Procedure Code, that the plaint should be taken off the file. The Court itself noted that the plaintiff appeared to be under age and took his statement in which he admitted that he was 15 years of age. Upon this the Court rejected the plaint; and also pointed out that the plaintiff had not deposited one-fifth of the purchase-money as required by section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, I of 1913. This order was upheld on appeal by the District Judge and the plaintiff has filed a second appeal to this Court.

In our opinion the order rejecting the plaint is clearly erroneous. It is not an order contemplated by O. XXXII, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, and, moreover, there was no application by the defendant to have the plaint taken off the file. It was pointed out in the case of Beni Ram Bhutt v. Ram Lal Dhukri (1) that a case of this nature is not expressly provided for in the Procedure Code, but there are decided cases which show that in a case of this nature the former practice must be considered to be in force. This practice was to suspend all proceedings and to allow sufficient time to enable the minor to have himself properly represented in the suit by a next friend. In the present case there is no ground at all for supposing that the plaintiff knowingly instituted the suit without a next friend with intention to deceive. Mr. Gobind Ram urges that on the 9th October 1919, the date on which the plaint was rejected, the suit, if then instituted, would have been barred by time. We have nothing to do with the question of limitation at present which can be decided by the Trial Court to which this case will be sent back.

We accept the appeal and, setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, remand the case to the Court of first instance for re-decision. The plaintiff should be given a reasonable time for remedying the defect in the plaint. Stamp in this Court and the lower Appellate Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Execution of decree—Payment out of Court—Certification by decree-holder, form of—Limitation, extension of.

There is no particular form under O. Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 9th January 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st Class, Sonepat, District Karnal, dated the 7th February 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Rama Nand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings and the facts are briefly these :—In 1904 the respondent Nanak Chand obtained a money-decree for Rs. 450 and costs against the present appellant Fattu. A compromise was arrived at between the parties in 1909 whereby a sum of Rs. 50 was paid down to the decree-holder and the balance was agreed to be paid by half yearly instalments of Rs. 25 each. It was further stipulated that, if there was a default in payment of two consecutive instalments the whole of the decretal amount would become payable at once. In November 1917, the decree-holder made an application for the execution of his decree stating therein that he had realized Rs. 275 out of Court from the judgment-debtor. This application was dismissed for default. In July 1920, he made another application for execution in which he stated that Rs. 320 had been realised out of Court. This application was again dismissed by the Munsif on the ground that it was barred by limitation under the twelve years' rule. An appeal against this dismissal was filed in the Court of the learned District Judge and the order of the learned Munsif set aside and the case remanded to him for a decision on the other points arising therein. The application was again dismissed on the ground that as no application for execution had been made within three years from the date of the compromise, it was barred by limitation under the three years' rule. On appeal the learned District Judge, following Eusuffzeman Sarkar v. Sanchla Lal Nahata (1), held that the certification of payment in the application for execution was sufficient compliance with the requirements of law as contained in O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code and allowed execution to proceed.

Against this decision a second appeal has been preferred to this Court under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and two grounds have been urged by Mr. Shamair Chand on behalf of the appellant. Firstly, it is contended that as the application of 1917 was made more than three years after the date of the compromise, it did not help to save limitation. His second contention is, that the rule of law laid down in Eusuffzeman Sarkar v. Sanchla Lal Nahata (1) is erroneous and has not been followed in subsequent rulings of the same High Court. He, therefore, argues that as the payments were not properly certified, a mere statement in the application for execution that the decree-holder had realized so much was not sufficient and that his application for execution made in 1920 was clearly barred. Mr. Rama Nand for the respondent, on the other hand, contests both these propositions and says that his application was within time and that the payments made out of Court saved limitation. A large number of authorities have been cited on both sides by the learned Counsel in support of their respective contentions, and, after carefully going through those authorities, I am of opinion that the weight of authority is in favour of Mr. Rama Nand and that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the application for execution certifying the payments already made amounted to a certifying under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Proedure Code, which the Court was bound to take notice of. The rule of the law deducible from the authorities cited at the Bar appears to be that, if the part payment of a decree amount is entered in an execution petition presented within three years from the date of such alleged payment it amounts, if the fact of payment is proved, to a certificate of payment under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, and will operate to save limitation under section 20 of the Limitation Act. In the present case the payments were set forth in the execution petitions both of 1917 and 1920 which it is alleged were presented within three years from the dates of the alleged payments. There is no particular form under O. XXI, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, in which a decree-holder must certify the payment to a Court, nor is there anything prescribed in the rule as to the time within which and the manner in which the decree-holder must certify the payment. I, therefore, see no reason why the statement made in the petitions should not be accepted as a certificate of payment under clause (1) of the rule. The fact of payment, however, is disputed by the judgment-debtor in this case, and, in these circumstances, it seems necessary that the Court should take evidence and come to a conclusion one way or the other whether payments had actually been made or not. If the fact of payment is proved and it is found that the payments were made within three years from the date of the present application, no question of limitation would arise and the application would be clearly within time. The order passed by the Court below remanding the case appears to be perfectly correct, and there are no grounds to interfere.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Construction of document—Relinquishment by landlord of right to produce of trees of occupancy tenant—Relinquishment for life or in perpetuity—Grant without words of inheritance—Grant "for ever"—Presumption.

The proprietor of a Raj executed in 1858 a document in the nature of a parwana addressed to the managers of his estate which, after reciting that a certain occupancy tenant had done great good work, proceeded, "Hence because of that good work it is ordered that whatever trees have been planted by his (the occupancy tenant's) ancestor and also if he plants any, the share of the Raj in them is given up. Hence this parwana is written to all forbidding you in any way to interfere with the trees standing on the nakdi holding of the said occupancy tenant for ever." A descendant of the executant of the document brought in 1916 a suit against a descendant of the occupancy tenant for a half share in the trees standing upon the later's holding. There was no evidence to show that any claim had ever been made by the proprietor of the Raj to participate in the produce of the trees since the document was executed excepting once when by forcible means and under duress the tenant was obliged to disgorge a small sum of money:

Held, (1) that although the meaning of the document was not very clear, the intention of the executant was to relinquish the right to the trees both present and future as was borne out by the concluding words of the document which forbade his servants from interfering with the trees on the holding for ever;

(2) that this interpretation was in consonance with what had actually taken place since the execution of the document;

(3) that the absence of any words of inheritance in the document was of no significance, as it was not a grant of land to a grantee, the so-called grantee being already an occupancy holder of the land having a permanent interest in the land descendible to his heirs.

Even if a grant contains the word "always" or the words "for ever" or similar words, if the grant is clearly of a life-interest only, the mere use of such words will not have the effect of extending the grant beyond the lifetime of the grantee. [p. 1032, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal from the judgment of a Single Judge of the High Court, dismissing an appeal from the District Judge, Muzaffarpur.

Messrs. P. Dayal and B. Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. S. Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, J.—This is an appeal under the Letter Patent from a decision of a Single Judge of this Court dismissing an appeal from the District Judge of Muzaffarpur which, in its turn reversed decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer of Motibari.

The plaintiff, Maharani Janki Kuer, who is the proprietor of the Bettiah Raj at present under the managership of the Court of Wards, instituted the proceedings out of which this appeal arises claiming that a certain entry in the Record of Rights finally published in the year 1916 should be cancelled, and that her right to a half share in the trees upon the defendant's holding might be declared.

The Assistant Settlement Officer dismissed the claim which was brought under section 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

On appeal to the Special Judge he overruled that decision and found that the plaintiff was entitled to a half share in the trees on the defendant's holding in accordance with the custom prevailing in the Bettiah Raj.

That decision was affirmed by the learned Judge of this Court on second appeal.

The defendant has appealed. The only question for determination in this appeal is whether the first Appellate Court and the learned Judge of this Court were right in their construction of a grant made to the defendant's ancestor by the ancestor of the plaintiff in the year 1858. In that year owing to services performed to the then proprietor of the Bettiah Raj by Bhicha Rai, the then tenant of the holding in question, the proprietor of the Bettiah Raj gave up his right to the trees standing on the defendant's holding and the question for determination is, whether that relinquishment of the right of the Bettiah Raj was intended to be permanent or whether it was merely intended to operate during the lifetime of Bhicha Rai. The document in question is set out in the judgment of the learned Judge of this Court. It is in the nature of a parwana addressed to the gomashtas, patwaris and zilladars of village Chattia Tappa Sonswal. It recites that Bhicha Rai has done great good work and rendered great help in the boundary dispute with the Huthwa Raj, and then proceeds thus, according to the translation adopted by the learned Judge: "Hence, because of that good work it is ordered that whatever trees have been planted by his ancestor and also if he plants any, the share of the Raj in them is given up. Hence this parwana is written to all forbidding you in any way to interfere with the trees standing on the nakdi holdings of the said Bhicha Rai for ever." It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff, as was found by the Special Judge and by the learned Judge of this Court, that the words which I have referred to merely created a relinquishment of the plaintiff's right during the lifetime of Bhicha Rai. The defendant, on the other hand, who is the descendant in the third generation from Bhicha Rai contends that the relinquishment was absolute and permanent. He further contends that he and his ancestors have been in possession of the holding ever since the year 1858 when this document was executed and that, with the exception of one occasion when a sum of Rs. 400 odd was forcibly extracted from him by the proprietor of the Bettiah Raj, he has never paid any sum to the landlord in respect of his share of the trees. The plaintiff contends that we ought to deal with this document in the same way as if it were in fact a grant of land and as it contains no words of inheritance it was, therefore, never intended that the grant should extend over a longer period than the life of the grantee and that, notwithstanding the words at the end of the document, which restrained the plaintiff's servants from interfering with the trees on the defendant's holding for ever, still there being no words of inheritance in the document it cannot be treated as a grant for anything beyond the lifetime of the grantee. It is quite true that, even if a document should contain words such as these, that is to say, the word "always," or the words "for ever" or similar words, if the grant is clearly the grant of a life-interest only the mere use of such words will not have the effect of extending the grant beyond the lifetime of the grantee. That was the basis of the decision in the case of Aziz-un-nissa v. Tassaduq Husain Khan (1). On the other hand, there is also abundant authority for the proposition that if there are no words of limitation in a grant then, even if there are no specific words of inheritance, it may still be a grant in perpetuity. See Bhaiya Ardawan Singh v. Udey Pratab Singh (2), Kooldeep Narain Singh v. The Government (3).

It appears to me that we must approach this document with a view to ascertaining what was the exact intention of the grantor and one must not, I think, lay too much stress upon the use of any particular word without considering the context and the other provisions in the document. The first observation I have to make is that this is not a grant of land to a grantee. The so-called grantee in this case was already the occupancy holder of the land in question and as such had a right, not only during his own lifetime, but a permament interest in the holding descendible to his heirs. According to the general law prevailing in this part of India the landlord would be entitled to the whole of the trees standing upon the holding, but by the custom of the Bettiah Raj the landlord is only entitled to a half share in the trees standing upon the holdings of his tenants, the tenant being entitled to the other half. Now this document to my mind clearly indicates that it was the intention of the landlord to give up his right, and indeed it is in terms a relinquishment of his right to his half share in the trees on the holding in question and it is a relinquishment in favour of the tenant. It is addressed to his gomashtas, patwaris and zilladars who would be the proper persons to protect the landlord's interests and see that they recovered anything that was due to him out of the property in question and it forbids them to interfere in any way with the trees standing on the holding of Bhicha Rai for ever. It seems to me, therefore, that the intention was that the landlord should give up his right to a half share in the trees and for that purpose he directs those who will be responsible for protecting his interests not in future to interfere in any way with the trees on that holding. I ought perhaps to point out that there is a passage in the document which comes immediately after the words "it is ordered that whatever trees have been planted by his ancestors" which has been rendered by the learned Judge "and also if he plants any." That may possibly be a proper translation of the words used but it is not necessarily so, and in fact the words actually used were somewhat obscure. The words in the vernacular are "agar nasab kare" which literally rendered into English mean "if should plant." There is no personal pronoun showing the person indicated who might plant. It may possibly refer to Bhicha Rai himself as it has been translated by the learned Judge. It may, on the other hand, have a general significance in which case the proper interpretation would be "if one should plant any" although the word "any" does not appear, and in such a case it would make the document apply not only to the trees which had been planted by the ancestors of Bhicha Rai but also to any trees which might be planted in the future. The meaning is not, as I have said, altogether clear but it evidently is intended to include something beyond the trees already planted on the land and to include trees which may be planted at some future time by somebody, and the conclusion which I have arrived at, giving the best judgment I am able to this somewhat obscure expression, is that the intention was that the landlord should relinquish his right to the trees both present and future, and this seems to me to be borne out by the concluding words of the document which forbid his servants from interfering in any way with the trees on that holding for ever. This interpretation also appears to me to be in consonance with what has actually taken place since the year 1858. There is no evidence in the case to show that any claim had ever been made by the landlord to participate in the produce of the trees ever since the document was executed with the one exception when by forcible means and under duress the tenant was obliged to disgorge a sum of something over Rs. 400. The conclusion I have arrived at is, that the learned Assistant Settlement Officer was right and that the Special Judge and the learned Judge of this Court on appeal were wrong in their interpretation of this document. I would allow this appeal with costs and dismiss the suit of the plaintiff.

Construction of document—Lease—Covenant to vacate on one week's notice—Refusal to vacate on notice—Damages, measure of.

Plaintiff granted defendant a lease of a house for eleven months on payment of a monthly rent, which provided that the defendant would vacate the house on one week's notice of ejectment:

Held, that the stipulation for the monthly payment of rent did not affect the plaintiff's right to serve a week's notice of ejectment on the defendant at any time, and that it was not necessary that the notice should terminate on the last day of a month. [p. 1034, col. 2.]

Where a tenant has held over wilfully and contumaciously, the Courts in India would properly award reasonable damages to the landlord and the amount of double the rent may be taken as a fitting standard of damages. [p. 1035, col. 1.]

Sayad Mohsin Shah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal is the result of a suit by the landlord of a house against a tenant for damages in the shape of enhanced rent on account of the tenant holding over.

The Trial Court decreed the claim in part, but on appeal by the plaintiff the learned District Judge decreed his whole claim of Rs. 55-6-0.

The question in second appeal turns upon the interpretation of the terms of the lease. Admittedly, a written lease was drawn up, but it is not forthcoming. The plaintiff stated that he had lost it. This explanation was accepted by both the Courts below and they admitted secondary evidence in the shape of an abstract given of the document in the register of the petition-writer who wrote it. In both Courts the defendant contested the admissibility of secondary evidence and asserted that the original deed had been withheld by the plaintiff purposely, but in second appeal this objection is not repeated, and the defendant's learned Counsel has argued from the copy of the petition-writer's entry.

According to that copy, the defendant was to be tenant for eleven months paying a monthly rent of Rs. 7-8-0, and if he failed to pay the rent month by month, he was liable to ejectment. The plaintiff was empowered at any time to give the defendant a week's notice to vacate the house and the defendant was to comply.

The tenancy commenced on the 8th August 1920 and on the 3rd June 1921 the plaintiff sent a notice to the defendant telling him to leave the house within a week or to pay double rent from the expiry of that week. The notice further stated that if the defendant did not vacate the house it would be assumed that he was prepared to pay double rent.

The defendant remained in possession up to the 10th or 12th of December 1921, but the present suit was brought on the 2nd of October 1921 for ejectment and double rent at Rs. 15 per mensem for the period of the defendant's occupation after the expiry of the week specified in the notice.

The first point in second appeal is that, because the rent was payable monthly, it was a monthly tenancy and the plaintiff could only give such notice of one week as would terminate on the last day of a month, that is to say, on the 7th of any Calendar month since the first month commenced on the 8th of August 1920. This is not what the abstract of the lease says. The tenancy was for 11 months and one week's notice could be given at any time. The stipulation for the monthly payment of rent has no effect upon the condition by which the plaintiff could serve the defendant with a week's notice at any time.

The second contention is, that there was no contract between the parties for the payment of double rent by the defendant in the event of his holding over after the receipt of notice, and that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that double rent was a reasonable compensation was not based upon any evidence. It was ruled, however, in Pirbhu Dial v. Ram Chand (1) that, when a tenant has held over wilfully and contumaciously, the Courts in India would properly award reasonable damages and the penatly laid down in England by Statute of double the rent, may sometimes be taken as a fitting standard. The lower Appellate Court has found distinctly that the defendant held over wilfully and without good reason, and, in view of the above authority, it cannot be said to have acted contrary to law in adopting the double rent standard as the measure of compensation.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 164—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 141, O. IX, r. 13—Proceedings other than suits—Limitation.

Article 164 of the Limitation Act is not restricted to applications to set aside ex parte decrees passed in suits. It also applies to similar applications made in proceedings other than suits, e.g., a petition to file an award under the Arbitration Act.

Application to set aside an ex parte order directing an award to stand filed under the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899.

Mr. Cholthram Devanmal, for the Respondents No. 1.

Mr. P. S. Shahani, for the Respondents No. 2.

ORDER.—On the 15th of January 1923 respondent No. 2 Dwarkadas Mangalchand was served personally with a notice issued by this Court to appear on the 18th January 1923, and to show cause why the award passed against the firm of Mangalchand-Dwarkadas, of which he is the managing proprietor, should not stand filed and be enforced as a decree under the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, IX of 1899. He failed to appear on that date and on the subsequent dates to which the case was adjourned. On the 6th of March 1923 the award was ordered to be filed in the absence of the respondent Dwarkadas. On the 21st of August 1923 Dwarkadas presented an application which purports to be dated the 20th July 1923, in which he applies to this Court under O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the ex parte order passed against him and for permitting him to file objections to the award.

This application is out of time. As the respondent was personally served, it was his duty to apply to the Court for setting aside the ex parte order within thirty days of the 7th March 1923 when this Court passed an order that the award should stand filed. Article 164 of the Limitation Act is not necessarily restricted to applications to set aside a decree passed in a suit. It applies to applications made under O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, read with section 141, Civil Procedure Code, in proeeedings other than suits. The contention that as the third column of the Schedule of the Act provides for limitation to run from the date the summons is served, and that, therefore, Article 164 should be confined to decrees, did not find favour with Madras High Court in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (1). In a later ruling Periakaruppan Chetty v. Chidambara Tambiran (2) the same Court proceeded on the assumption that Article 164 applied to orders passed in execution proceedings.

Apart from the question of limitation, this application must fail on the merits. The applicant has not disclosed sufficient cause for his non-appearance on the date fixed for hearing of the objections. The ground for his non-appearance as disclosed in his application and the affidavit in support of it, is that he could not attend the Court on the 6th March 1923 owing to a fit of epilepsy. He was, however, required to attend not on the 6th of March 1923 but on the 18th January 1923. He failed to attend on that day, and there is no explanation why he was absent. There is nothing even to show that the respondent knew that the case had been adjourned to the 6th March 1923 or that he did attend on that day but was prevented on account of a fit of epilepsy from appearing in Court. This application has been made seven months after the date on which the applicant should have appeared in Court if he did at all intend to appear. During all the seven months he was not unable to find out what orders had been passed. This application has been made after the award has been transferred for execution to the Amritsar Court and the respondent's property attached, and probably with the object of delaying the sale of the attached property.

I dismiss the application with costs.

Section 25 of the Estates Partition Act applies to suits by the class of persons referred to in section 23 of the Act, that is to say, persons claiming a right or title in or to a parent estate and not to suits by persons objecting to any partition at all. [p. 1038, col. 1.]

Previous partition may be presumed without the production of a formal partition-deed from the facts that the proprietors of the estate have been in separate possession of their pattis and have been separately collecting the rents throughout the areas allotted to them from different tenants for a very long time and there are a number of documents which apparently take it for granted that the different proprietors were in separate possession and held the different pattis in severalty as representing their respective interests in the estate. Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad, in S. A. No. 338 of 1919, dated the 16th June 1922, reported as 74 Ind. Cas. 642, affirming a decision of the District Judge, Muzaffarpur, affirming that of the Munsif of that place, dated the 5th September 1917.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the defendants under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Jawala Prasad, affirming a decision of the District Judge of Muzaffarpur, which in turn affirmed a decision of the Munsif.

The appellants, who are the defendants in the suit, and the respondents, who are the plaintiffs, were together the proprietors of Mauza Bhadai. In the year 1913 the defendants applied to the Collector for partition of the mauza. The plaintiffs raised objections under section 7 of the Estates Partition Act contending that the estate had already been partitioned by private arrangement formally made between the proprietors many years ago and that, consequently, the Collector was not competent to effect a partition again. This objection appears to have been heard by the Collector and dismissed on the 3rd February 1913. On the 5th September 1913 the plaintiffs instituted the present suit claiming a declaration that Mauza Bhadai had already been formally partitioned among the proprietors with their consent; that they had been in separate possession thereof accordingly, and that the mauza could not in law be partitioned under Act V of 1897. They further asked for an injunction restraining the defendants from proceeding with the batwara before the Collector. The hearing has been delayed by the fact that the plaint was filed in the wrong Court originally and was not presented in the proper Court until 1916. Nothing, however, turns upon that in this appeal.

The main defence in the suit was that there had been no previous partition. It appears that a considerable volume of evidence was called on this subject and the Munsif came to a decision of fact that, in or about the year 1870, there had been a private partition and that since that date each of the proprietors had been in separate possession of the patti allotted to him on that occasion and collecting separately the rents from the different tenants throughout the area of which he was in possession. There was apparently no actual document showing the terms of the partition but upon the evidence produced, much of which was documentary, including the Record of Rights published 20 years ago, it appeared to the Munsif that the case was amply proved that there had been a partition in or before the year 1870 and that ever since then the parties had acted thereunder.

On appeal the learned District Judge took the same view and dismissed the appeal.

On second appeal to this Court Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad came to the conclusion that the question was one of fact and that the facts had been found by both the lower Courts and he saw no reason in law for disturbing those findings. He adds at the end of his judgment that it was faintly suggested that the suit, having been brought more than 4 months after the order of the Collector, made under section 29, declaring the estate to be under partition, was barred by limitation under section 25 of the Estates Partition Act. That section, in the opinion of the learned Judge, had no application to a suit of this nature, and having found that the proceedings adopted by the Collector under the Estates Partition Act were ultra vires he held that there was no bar to the present suit for a declaration and injunction. He accordingly dismissed the appeal with costs.

From that decision the present appeal has been brought before this Bench under the Letters Patent. The point which has been argued before us is a point which was not taken either in the Trial Court or before the learned District Judge on appeal, and it was only faintly argued before the learned Judge of this Court on second appeal. It has, however, been most strenuously argued before us to-day. The question arises in this way. Section 7, part of Chapter II of the Estates Partition Act, provides that where the lands of an estate have been divided by private arrangement formally made and agreed to by all the proprietors, and each proprietor has, in pursuance of such arrangement, taken possession of separate lands to be held in severalty as representing his interest in the estate, no partition of the estate shall be made under the Act except in certain cases which are not applicable here. Section 25 which is relied upon by the appellants forms part of Chapter IV. It provides that no suit instituted in a Civil Court, after the lapse of four months after the Collector has recorded a proceeding under section 29, by any person claiming any right or title in or to a parent estate, shall avail to affect or stay the progress of any proceedings which may have been taken under the Act for the partition of the estate. It was contended, in the first place, that section 25 was an absolute bar to the present suit. That contention, however, cannot possibly prevail. Assuming that section 25 has any application at all, the only affect of it would be a suit instituted in the Civil Court would have the effect of staying the progress of the proceedings before the Collector. There is nothing in the section which is a bar to a suit proceeding in the Civil Court. The main question, however, which was argued before us was whether section 25 had any application at all to a suit such as the present where the plaintiffs claim that under the provisions of section 7 of the Act the Collector had no power whatever to partition the lands in question. Having regard to the wording of section 25 which, I think, must be interpreted in the light of the preceding sections of Chapter IV, there is, I think, a great deal to be said for the view that section 25 has no application to a suit such as the present, but only applies to suits by the class of persons referred to in section 23, that is to say, persons claiming a right or title in or to a parent estate and not to suits by persons objecting to any partition at all. Chapter IV begins by stating how applications for partition shall be made and what they shall contain. Provision is then made for publishing Notifications inviting persons interested and claiming any proprietary right in the estate and objecting to the partition to come in and assert their claims and objections. Section 22 gives the Collector power to reject the application for partition, if he thinks fit, on considering any objection thereto. But by section 23, if the objection raises any question of right or title or of extent of interest as between any applicant and any other person claiming to be a proprietor of the parent estate, then the Collector may hold an enquiry and, if satisfied that the applicant is in possession of the interest claimed, he may either direct a partition of his interest or postpone proceedings for four months. The object of the postponement appears from section 24 which provides that at the expiration of four months the Collector shall resume the proceedings unless the objector or some other person has obtained an order from a Civil Court directing that such proceedings be stayed or shows that a suit has been instituted before a Civil Court to try some question of such a nature as to lead the Collector to think that proceedings should be stayed pending the trial of the suit. Then follows section 25 already referred to. It would appear, therefore, having regard to the sections which I have referred to, that there are strong grounds for holding that the words in section 25 which relate to suits by persons claiming any right or title in or to a parent estate refer back to the persons and the relief claimed mentioned in section 23 and that section 25 relates only to claims by such persons. In the present case the claim is not one of that nature. It is a claim by one of the proprietors claiming not a right or title in the parent estate but that there is in fact no parent estate because the estate had already been partitioned and, therefore, that the jurisdiction of the Collector to effect a partition no longer exists. This appears to be in accordance with the view of the Calcutta High Court which had to consider the question as it arose under the previous Partition Act, which for this purpose is practically similar, in the case of Ananda Kishore Chowdhury v. Dayi Thakurani (1). There is, however, a decision of this Court in Badri Narain Singh v. Subhkaran Misser (2) which, so far as one can gather from the somewhat meagre report of the case, appears to take the view that section 25 of the Act would be sufficient in a case like the present to prevent an injunction being granted staying the parties from proceeding with the partition. It is, however not necessary, in my opinion to decide this point because the facts necessary to establish the appellant's case have not been proved. Before they can establish their contetion that section 25 applies they must shew that the suit was not instituted within four months after the order was made by the Collector under section 29. In the present case, as the point was not taken in the Trial Court and as there was no issue framed about it, it is hardly surprising that the evidence upon this question is somewhat meagre. The only evidence we have is that on the 3rd February 1913 the plaintiff's objection under section 7 was dismissed by the Collector. Then we know that on the 5th June in the same year the present suit was instituted. There is, however, nothing on the record to show at what date, if at all, an order was passed by the Collector under section 29. We have been asked to assume that such an order would be passed immediately the plaintiff's objection under section 7 was rejected but that by no means follows. There may, for aught we know, in the partition proceedings have been objections by other persons and these clearly would have to be disposed of before any order could be passed under section 29. In fact, there is no evidence at all as to when the order under section 29 was passed. It seems to me, therefore, that the defendants' objection fails in limine because they have not proved the facts upon which such objection could be established.

The only other point which was argued before us was that the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court were not sufficient to justify the Court in arriving at the conclusion that there had been a previous partition. It is quite true that no formal document showing partition had been proved in the case, but I entirely agree with the learned District Judge in the view he took that the production of such a document is not necessary in order to establish a previous partition. Such a partition may well be presumed from the facts which are proved in the case and which show that from the year 1870 the proprietors of this estate have been in separate possession of their pattis and have been separately collecting the rents throughout the areas allotted to them from the different tenants, and there are a number of documents which apparently take it for granted that the different proprietors were in separate possession and holding different pattis in severalty as representing their respective interests in the estate. As stated by the learned District Judge, the separate pattis have been recognised for so long both by the maliks themselves and by the tenants that it seems almost certain that there was a partition and not merely a mutual arrangement to enjoy ijmali property in the most convenient way. The question was whether upon these findings the learned District Judge was entitled to presume a partition. In my opinion he was so entitled and the appellant's contention to the contrary fails. The result is that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION PETITION NO. 21 OF 1922.
February 2, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Campbell.

THE FIRM MUL CHAND-HUT CHAND, THROUGH RELU MAL—DECREE-HOLDER—PETITIONER

versus

THE FIRM GANDA MAL-RALLIA RAM, THROUGH SANT RAM, AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Order holding decree executable against person or property of judgment-debtor—Appeal, second, whether lies.

The order of an Appellate Court holding that a decree-holder can proceed against the property but not against the person of the judgment-debtor, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to the personal liability of the judgment-debtor to satisfy the decree and falls under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code. A second appeal is, therefore, competent against such an order.

Petition, under section 44 of Act IX of 1919, for revision of an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 1st August 1921, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Second Class, Amritsar, dated the 17th March 1921.

Mr. Jai Gopal Sethi, for the Petitioner.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Mr. Nanak Chand, for Mr. Sundar Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The preliminary objection is taken that no revision lies in this case since a second appeal would lie. The objection must be sustained.

The facts are these. In execution of a decree a warrant of arrest was issued against Sant Ram, one of the judgment-debtors. This warrant was not executed and was re-called. The judgment-debtor presented an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, that his person was not liable for the decree. The First Court held that the decree could not be executed at all against the judgment-debtors who are the firm Ganda Mal-Rallia Ram of which Sant Ram is one of the proprietors. The decree-holders appealed, stating their appeal to be under section 47. The lower Appellate Court held that the decree-holders could proceed against the property but not against the persons of the judgment-debtors.

There is no doubt that this order of the lower Appellate Court falls within the definition of a decree given in section 2

(2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. It conclusively determines the right of the parties with regard to one of the matters for determination under section 47, that is to say, the personal liability of the judgment-debtors to satisfy that decree

The learned Counsel for the petitioners has asked me to convert the revision into an appeal. One very strong reason stands in the way of my doing so, namely, that as an appeal the petition would be hopelessly out of time and, if it had been filed as a second appeal, there are no possible grounds on which time could have been extended. The lower Appellate Court sits at Amritsar. Its judgment was delivered on the 1st of August 1921. Three days only were spent in obtaining copies—the 1st to 3rd October—and the petition for revision was not presented to this Court until the 30th of November 1921. The only explanation forthcoming for the delay is that the petitioners were advised that a revision application was competent; but there was no reason why the revision application should not have been put in in October and they have shown no such diligence as to entitle them to what would be a very substantial concession at the expense of the other side.

The petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), s. 31 (2)—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 74—History of District attached to Settlement Record, whether part of Record of Rights—Public document—Proof—Certified copy.

The history of a District attached to a Settlement Record does not form part of the Record of Rights as it is not one of the documents specified in section 31 (2) of the Punjab Land Revenue Act. But it may be presumed that it was compiled by or by the direction of the Settlement Officer, and is, therefore, a public document within the meaning of section 74 of the Evidence Act, provable by the production of a certified copy.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jhang, at Sargodha, dated the 22nd May 1919, reversing that of the Junior Subordinate Judge First Class, Jhang, dated the 10th January 1919.

Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Appellants.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case sue for pre-emption in respect of a sale of land on the ground that they are owners in the village in which the land is situate. The question in dispute is whether the vendee is, as he alleges, a collateral of the vendors and has, therefore, a superior right of pre-emption. The Subordinate Judge gave judgment for the plaintiffs, but the District Judge on appeal has held that the vendee's relationship to the vendors has been proved and he has dismissed the suit.

His finding is based mainly on certified copies (Exhibit D-A. and D-B) of entries in a history of the Multan District which is attached to the Settlement Record and in second appeal it is contended that the copies are inadmissible in evidence, the history in question being neither a part of the Record of Rights nor a public document. We agree in thinking that the history does not form part of the Record of Rights, not being one of the documents specified in section 31 (2) of the Land Revenue Act. But we see no reason to doubt that the history, having been placed with the Settlement Record, must have been compiled by, or by the direction of the Settlement Officer, and that it is, therefore, a public document within the meaning of section 74 of the Evidence Act, and is provable by the production of a certified copy. There appears to be no force in the contention that Exhibits D-A and D-B are copies of a copy. We hold that they are relevant and that the decision of the lower Appellate Court, being a finding of fact and based on legal evidence, cannot be contested in second appeal.

The appeal consequently fails and we dismiss it with costs.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Stay of suit—Duty of Court—Discretion how to be exercised—Onus—Refusal to stay suit—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Illegal assumption of revision—Jurisdiction—No other remedy open—Interpretation of s. 115.

In an application for the stay of a suit under section 19 of the Arbitration Act it is the prima facie duty of the Court to stay the suit and the onus is on the plaintiff to show why he should not be bound by his agreement to refer and that sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be so referred. The lower Court refused to stay the suit under section 19 of the Arbitration Act on the sole ground that there was a breach of warranty on the part of one of the contracting parties and did not apply its mind to the question whether there was sufficient reason why it should not be referred in accordance with the submission:

Held, that the lower Court had illegally assumed jurisdiction, that there was an irregular exercise of it and that there was an erroneous conclusion of law. [p. 1043, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.—Though no appeal lies in this case, as held by the recent Full Bench Judgment of this Court, it is argued that, in the circumstances of this case, we should exercise our revisional jurisdiction and set aside the order of the lower Court. Versimal Dewanmal had contracted to purchase from Forbes, Forbes and Co. 6 cases of cotton embroidery according to sample, under an indent which contained the usual arbitration clause. On the arrival of the goods the purchaser cancelled the contract, as the goods did not conform to the sample. Correspondence ensued between the parties and the sellers called upon the buyers to refer the dispute to arbitration in terms of the submission clause in the indent. The buyers suggested a survey, though by their letter of the 29th July 1921, they declined to be bound by the report of the surveyors. Two surveyors were accordingly appointed, one by either party. The report of the surveyors was that the goods were generally inferior in quality but that the buyer should pay for and take delivery of them in terms of the contract less an allowance of 20 per cent. on the invoice value. The sellers next called upon the buyers to take delivery of the goods in terms of the surveyors' report and threatened to sell them at his risk if delivery was not taken within a specified time. The buyers thereupon filed a suit against the sellers for a declaration that the contract had been rightly cancelled and for an injunction restraining them from enforcing it. The sellers applied under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act for a stay of the suit. The learned Judge of the Court below rejected the application and the sellers, Forbes, Forbes and Co., apply to us in revision.

Clause 13 of the indent between the parties is as follows: 'Any dispute arising out of this agreement whatever be its nature shall unless amicably settled be referred to arbitration of two European merchants of Karachi, etc.' It is not disputed as it could not well be that the differences between the parties as regards the inferiority of the goods tendered is one that has arisen out of the agreement between the parties. The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner appears to have proceeded on the basis of the illegality of the order passed by the surveyors that the buyer was bound to take delivery of the goods with an allowance of 20 per cent. whereas in his view as the goods were not according to sample the buyer had the option of either accepting or refusing them. And the dismissal of the application under section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act seems to be based on the ground that, as there was a breach of warranty on the part of the seller, the buyers were justified in refusing to accept delivery. In the first place, this reasoning is open to the obvious objection that the report of the surveyors was not binding on the parties and the buyer had made a clear stipulation that it would not be binding upon him, as a matter of fact the report of the surveyors would be merely evidence in the case as to the condition of the goods. Secondly, the report of the surveyors or the fact of the survey did not imply that the right to refer the disputes between the parties to arbitration had been relinquished, and the point for decision before the learned Judge was whether in terms of section 19 Indian Arbitration Act "there was no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission" and to this point the learned Judge does not seem to have applied his mind. Whether the order of the surveyors was legal or illegal, the right to refer the disputes to arbitration still existed and the arbitrators were the proper tribunal to sit in adjudication upon them. The parties having agreed that any dispute, whatever be its nature, shall be referred to a domestic forum of their choice, then a prima facie duty is cast upon the Court to act upon such an agreement and the onus is on the plaintiff to show why he should not be bound by the agreement to refer to arbitration, and that sufficient reason exists why the matter should not be so referred. No doubt, the Court is vested with a discretion either to stay or not to stay a suit but the discretion must be guided by judicial principles. As said in the case of Goverdhandas Vishindas v. Ramchand Manjimal (1): "The Court should exercise its discretion in refusing to stay a suit in a sparing and cautious manner and should not do so unless it can be established that there is good ground for apprehending that there will be a failure of justice if the reference to arbitration is allowed to proceed." In Abdullah Haroon v. Messrs. E. D. Sassoon & Co. (2) it was held that in an application for stay it is the prima facie duty of the Court to stay the suit and the onus is on the plaintiff to show why he should not be bound by his agreement to refer.

Now, considering the language of section 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act, has it been established that there was sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred to arbitration in accordance with the agreement between the parties? The only reason advanced by the learned Judge is that as the surveyors found that the goods were inferior in quality, there was a breach of warranty, consequently the buyers were not bound by the arbitration clause. But the sellers do not admit that the goods are inferior in quality; they say that the 20 per cent. allowance was offered to the buyer in order to help the clearance and not on account of any inferiority. The dispute, therefore, as to the quality of the goods between the seller and buyer strictly fell within the purview of the arbitration clause and it was for the arbitrators to determine whether the goods tendered were in accordance with the basis sample.

The question, however, remains whether we should interfere in our revisional jurisdiction with the order complained of. Section 115, Civil Procedure Code, is certainly not directed against erroneous conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved. As observed by the Privy Council in Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar (3): 'The section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it, the section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved.' Taking this as the standard for our interference in revision, I am of opinion that the learned Judge has illegally assumed jurisdiction by refusing to stay a suit on the sole ground that the surveyor's report reveals a breach of warranty on the part of one of the contracting parties. It is not merely an erroneous conclusion of law but it is an irregular exercise of jurisdiction to refuse to stay a suit on the ground mentioned. There is nothing in the order of the learned Judge which would point to sufficient reason having been shown why the matter should not be referred to arbitration unless it is implied in the concluding part of his order "that the allowance was offered as compensation for a breach which entitled the buyer to decline to accept delivery."

By the refusal to stay the suit the vendors are practically left without any remedy. In Bai Atra i v. Thakur Kunwar (4), it was observed by Batchelor, J., that "Inasmuch as section 115, Civil Procedure Code, is merely an empowering section granting certain jurisdiction to the High Court and as the use or exercise of that jurisdiction will, within the prescribed limits, be regulated by the discretion of the High Court, the section ought to receive rather a liberal than a narrow interpretation." In Naraindas v. Jassomal (5) it was held that the powers of the High Court under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, should receive a liberal rather than a narrow interpretation when the applicant has no other remedy.

I would set aside the order of the lower Court and direct Suit No. 1215 of 1921 to be stayed.

In the circumstances of the case, I make no order as to costs.

Raymond, A. J. C.—I concur.

The provision contained in section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act though not specifically applicable to the Punjab, is applicable in principle. [p. 1044, col. 2.]

Where a transfer is attacked as having been made to defeat and delay creditors, it is the knowledge and intention of the transferee which is the determining factor as to the validity of the transfer. If the transferee buys in good faith and for valid consideration, his purchase cannot be set aside by reason of the transferor having sold the property for the express purpose of defeating or delaying his creditors. In each case it is a question of fact as to whether or not the transferee has bought in good faith and without knowledge of the transferor's object for selling. [p. 1045, col. 2.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated the 26th June 1918, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Mianwali, dated the 28th April 1916.

Mr. Ghulam Rasul and Lala Mul Chand, R. S., for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nanak Chand Chopra and B. A. Cooper, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The circumstances out of which this appeal has arisen are briefly as follows:—

In April 1914 one Hakim sold 1245 kanals, 12 marlas of land to his son Ibrahim, the present appellant. In July 1914 Jiwan Das, Aya Ram and Handa Ram, certain creditors of Hakim, obtained a decree against him for payment of the sums due, and in execution of this decree they attached the land which had been sold. The vendee thereupon filed objections to the attachment, which were disallowed by the Executing Court. The vendee then brought the present suit for a declaration that the land in question was not liable to attachment and sale under the decree. In other words, he claimed that the property in the land duly passed to him by virtue of the sale to him by Hakim.

The execution creditors, on the other hand, contended that the sale was a fraudulent and colourable transaction intended to defeat the execution of the decree and, therefore, voidable at their option under section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

Counsel for the vendee, the appellant in the present appeal, urges, firstly, that the Transfer of Property Act does not apply to the Punjab, and, secondly, that even if it does, the transaction was a genuine one, made for valuable consideration and without knowledge on his part of any fraudulent intent on the part of the vendor, and, therefore, cannot be impeached. So far as the first contention is concerned, it is clearly unsustainable. It has been held in Lakhmi Narain v. Tara Singh (1) and in Champo v. Shankar Das (2) that the Act, though not specifically applied to the Punjab, is applicable in principle, and with this view we are in entire accord.

As to the second contention, the onus of proving the genuineness of the sale was placed by the Court of first instance upon the vendee, and on the trial of this issue the Court found in favour of the vendee, holding that the sale was made in good faith.

On appeal to the District Judge the latter was of opinion that the onus of proving that the sale was collusive and fictitious lay upon those who alleged fraud, that is, upon the present respondents and he found as a fact that the sale was not fraudulent or collusive, and he further held that the consideration was not inadequate.

On appeal to the High Court, Broadway, J., was of opinion that the onus of proving his title to the land lay in the first instance on the vendee, and he thereupon allowed the appeal, set aside the decree in favour of the present appellant, and remanded the case to the lower Appellate Court for a fresh decision on the merits, with a direction to the Court to deal with the case with due regard to the observations which he had made in regard to this question of onus.

On the matter again coming before the lower Appellate Court a different District Judge to the one who first heard the appeal was sitting, and he ordered that a commission be issued to have the land valued with a view to ascertaining the adequacy of the consideration for the sale.

When the matter once more came before him the learned District Judge held that the bona fide nature of the sale had not been established, and, accepting the appeal, he dismissed the suit.

It is true that the onus of proving title to the property sold lay in the first instance upon the vendee. This has been established by a number of decisions, amongst others the case of Nanhi Jan v. Bhuri (3) referred to by Broadway, J. But all that this case decided was that a person who claims land which has been attached in pursuance of an execution decree, must in a suit brought under section 283 of the Civil Procedure Code (corresponding to O. XXI, r. 63 of the present Code) give prima facie evidence of the genuineness of the document of sale. This onus, as Broadway, J., points out in his judgment, has been found by the Court of first instance, to have been satisfactorily discharged by the vendee in the present case. The claimant to the land having shown a prima facie title, the onus was then shifted to the execution creditors to prove that the transfer was fraudulent and unreal. This they failed to do, according to the finding of the lower Appellate Court when the case first came before it on appeal.

The matter at that time stood as follows:—The Court of the first instance had found that the transferee had established a prima facie claim to the land. On appeal the lower Appellate Court had found that the onus of proving fraud lay upon those who alleged it, and that not only had this onus not been discharged, but that in fact the sale was not fraudulent or collusive.

It appears to us that those findings of the lower Appellate Court as to the genuineness of the transfer were not open to challenge on second appeal. The onus of proof does not appear to us to have been wrongly placed in either Court, and even if it had been, as the issues were fully tried out, and no objection appears to have been raised by the defendants to the form of those issues, it is doubtful if the irregularity, if there were one, could be regarded as having in any way prejudiced them. As the matter now comes before us, however, we have to deal with a finding of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the suit on the grounds: (1) that "even if the transferee was unaware of the debts due by the transferor the creditors could object to the sale as made with a knowledge that it would delay or defeat their claim" Having arrived at this conclusion the learned District Judge forms the opinion that the bona fide nature of the claim had not been established.

We are unable to agree with the expression of law which is involved in this finding, and upon which the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is based.

It has been held in Bhagwant Appaji v. Kedari Kashinath (4), where the law on the subject was exhaustively reviewed, that a sale was valid although made with the object of defeating the anticipated attachment of a judgment-creditor. It is quite clear from this and many other decisions of the Courts in India since the passing of the Transfer of Property Act, that a transfer of property though made with the deliberate object of avoiding the payment of just debts, is not in itself a good ground for setting aside the transaction.

The knowledge and intention of the transferee are the determining factors in these cases. If the transferee buys in good faith and for valid consideration his purchase cannot be set aside by reason of the transferor having sold the property for the express purpose of defeating or delaying his creditors. In each case it is a question of fact as to whether or not the transferee has bought in good faith and without knowledge of the transferor's object for selling. It is true that relationship of father and son, as vendor and purchaser respectively, is an important element to be considered. Such a relationship must necessarily throw a certain amount of suspicion upon a sale of this kind, but such suspicion can, of course, be dispelled by the presence of other circumstances, and of these the most important is the fact that a valid consideration has passed, and the transferee has gone into actual possession of the property. In the present case there has admittedly been valid consideration for the sale. It has not been found, nor, in our opinion, could it be found, that the consideration was grossly inadequate so as to raise a presumption of intent to defraud creditors within the meaning of the second part of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act,

Moreover, it has been held by the Court of first instance, and the finding has not been dissented from by the lower Appellate Court, that the transferee has in fact purchaced in good faith. We hold, therefore, that, on the true construction of section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act as applied to the admitted facts of this case, the sale cannot be set aside in favour of the judgment-creditors.

We accordingly accept the appeal and reversing the finding of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

Appeal from a decision of the Officiating District Judge, Patna, dated the 6th June 1921 confirming the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, Patna, dated the 17th June 1920.

Mr. P. N. Sinha, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants against the decree of the Officiating District Judge of Patna, confirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge and decreeing the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that certain partition proceedings commenced by the Collector on the application of the defendants were bad in law as opposed to the provisions of section 7 of the Estates Partition Act, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from proceeding with the partition proceedings before the Collector. The facts are shortly these: The plaintiffs and the defendants are co-sharer proprietors of Estate Lachmipur Tapey Mekra, Pargana Gayaspur, bearing Touzi No. 8267. On the 17th February 1917 the defendants filed an application before the Collector for partition of this estate under the Estates Partition Act and notices provided by section 21 of the Estates Partition Act were issued, whereupon the plaintiffs raised an objection to the partition on the ground that the est te h d been previously partitioned and each co-sharer was in possession of separate lands held in severalty as representing his interest in the estate and, therefore, no partition could be made. This objection was disallowed by the Collector and on the 12th August 1917 the Collector recorded proceedings under section 29 of the Estates Partition Act. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal before the Commissioner who dismissed the appeal by his order dated the 22nd November 1917 and ordered the partition to proceed. The plaintiffs thereupon brough the present suit for a declaration as stated above.

The defendants appeared and objected that, having regard to the provisions of section 25 of the Estates Partition Act, the present suit was not maintainable and they also alleged that there was no private partition as alleged by the plaintiffs and, therefore, there was no bar to the partition proceedings before the Collector. Both the Courts below have held that there was a private partition as contemplated by section 7 of the Estates Partition Act and that, therefore, the partition before the Collector could not proceed. They have also held that section 25 of the Estates Partition Act does not bar the present suit. The defendants prefer this second appeal and they contend that, having regard to the provisions of section 25 read with section 7, the suit was barred. Now, section 25 of the Estates Partition Act provides that no suit instituted in a Civil Court after the lapse of four months after the Collector has made a direction under clause (a) or clause (b) of section 23, or recorded a proceeding under section 29 by any person claiming any right or title in or to a parent estate, shall avail to affect or stay the progress of any proceedings which may have been taken under this Act for the partition of the estate. In order to understand the nature of the suit referred to in section 25 of the Estates Partition Act, it is necessary to refer to sections 22 and 23. After the notice is issued by the Collector under section 21, it is provided by section 22 that if any person claiming a proprietary right as provided in section 21 states an objection to the partition on or before the day specified in the Notification published under section 21, or at any subsequent time, if it shall then seem fit to the Collector to admit such objection and the Collector, on consideration of the objection, is of opinion that th re is good and sufficient reason for rejecting the application, he may reject the same, and if he does so, shall record the grounds of such rejection. This section 22 contemplates an objection to the partition proceedings before the Collector on general grounds and one of those grounds may be the ground contemplated by section 7 of the Estates Partition Act. Then, section 23 says that if any such objection raises any question of right or title or of extent of interest as between any applicant and any other person claiming to be a proprietor of the parent estate and if it appears to the Collector that such question has not been already determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the Collector may hold such inquiry into the objection as he may deem necessary, and, if he be satisfied that the applicant is in possession of the extent of the interest for the separation of which he has applied, may, instead of rejecting the application as provided in section 22 (a), direct that the partition proceedings shall proceed for the purpose of forming and assigning to the applicant a separate estate in accordance with the extent of interest claimed by him in the parent estate, or (b) direct that such proceedings be postponed for four months.

Now the objection contemplated by section 23 relates to a question of right or title or extent of interest as between any applicant and any other person claiming to be a proprietor of the estate. Section 25 says that no suit instituted by any person claiming any right or title in or to a parent estate, shall avail to affect or stay the progress of any proceeding which may have been taken under this Act for the partition of the estate if such suit is brought after the lapse of four months after the Collector has made an order under section 23 or recorded a proceeding under section 29. To my mind the suit contemplated by section 25 is a suit raising a question referred to in section 23 of the Estates Partition Act and not a question under section 22 of the Act. I am, therefore, of opinion that the present suit which does not raise any question of right or title or of extent of interest of the plaintiffs but raises an objection to the proceeding of the partition proceedings before the Collector is not affected by section 25 of the Act. This question has been considered in a very recent judgment of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice in Letters Patent Appeal. No. 91 of 1920 [Narsingh Thakur v. Bishunpergash Singh (1)] which was delivered on the 3rd August 1923 and the point has been elaborately discussed by his Lordship the Chief Justice and he has come to the conclusion that a suit like the one is not barred by section 25. The first objection taken by the learned Vakil for the appellants must, therefore, be overruled.

It has next been argued that there is no finding that there has been a previous private partition representing the interest of the different proprietors as contemplated by section 7 of the Estates Partition Act. The learned District Judge in his judgment expressly states that this point was taken before him on behalf of the defendants and he comes to the conclusion that the partition as proved by the plaintiffs in the present case is a partition as contemplated by section 7 of the Act. This finding is a finding of fact which is conclusive in second appeal. This objection, therefore, cannot be entertained.

The result is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Das, J.—I agree. The decision of my Lord the Chief Justice in the case to which my learned brother has referred is so clear and convincing that I have come to the conclusion that the view presented by me in Badri Narain Singh v. Subhkaran Misser (2) can no longer be maintained. It is quite true that the question was not argued in the form in which it has been argued before us to-day but it must be conceded that if, as I think, the point has been correctly decided by my Lord the Chief Justice in the case to which my learned brother has referred, the appeal in Badri Narain Singh v. Subhkaran Misser (1) should have succeeded and not failed.

A mortgage-deed provided for re-payment of the mortgage-money and interest by monthly instalments. It was also agreed that default in payment of each instalment should constitute a separate cause of action. Default having been made in payment of the instalments, the mortgagee sued to recover the amount of the instalments and interest:

Held, (1) that the suit was governed by Art. 132 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and that limitation in respect of each instalment began to run from the date of default in respect of that instalment; [p. 1052, col. 2.]

(2) that the mere forbearance of the mortgagee to sue for the recovery of the amount of the instalments in respect of which default had been made did not amount to waiver and did not stop limitation from running. [p. 1052, col. 2.]

In a proceeding by or against a benamidar the person beneficially entitled is fully affected by the rules of res judicata. [p 1051, col. 1.]

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Mr. Obedullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decision of the Senior Sub-

Judge of Simla, dated the 16th December 1918, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for Rs. 12,500 principal and interest alleged to be due on a mortgage-deed dated the 7th of October 1899. The material facts are shortly these:—

One Mrs. Gomes owned, among other properties, a dwelling house at Simla known by the name of Ayrcliffe. By a Will dated the 15th of October 1879 she bequeathed a life-interest in this house to her husband Mr. Gomes and an absolute interest after his death to her sister Mrs. Elizabeth Moses. On the 4th of November 1887 Mrs. Moses made a Will under which she bequeathed the whole of her real and personal estate absolutely to her two daughters Charlotte Isabella Elliott and Mary Grace Eliott in equal shares. It appears that Mr. Jones, the husband of one of the daughters, was indebted to a large extent to the present plaintiffs who were pressing him for payment. In order to discharge this liability Mrs. Jones, his wife, executed on the 7th October 1899 a mortgage of her reversionary interest in Ayrcliffe estate for Rs. 4,000 in favour of the plaintiffs. The consideration for this mortgage was made up as stated by the plaintiffs in a prior litigation of the sum of Rs. 3,252-3 due from Mr. Jones on previous bahi accounts and a sum of Rs. 743-13 alleged to have been paid in cash on the date the mortgage-deed was executed. The mortgage carried interest at Rs. 18 per cent. per annum and it was stipulated that repayments would be made by monthly instalments of Rs. 20 plus interest with a further stipulation that the entire advance with interest would be re-paid within ten years from the date of the mortgage. On the 21st January 1916 Mrs. Jones sold to defendant No. 1, Mir Muhammad Khan, her reversionary interest in this property. On the 31st May 1918 the plaintiffs brought this suit for the recovery of Rs. 3,252-3 principal minus Rs. 40 alleged to have been re-paid by the defendant and Rs. 9,287-13 interest from 18th March 1902 to date of suit total Rs. 12,500 impleading both Mir Muhammad Khan and Mrs. Jones as defendants to the suit.

The defendants resisted the suit on a variety of grounds, but their main contentions were:—(1) that it was barred by limitation, (2) that the deed was executed under undue influence and, (3) that the mortgage was void for want of consideration. The plaintiff's case, on the other hand, was that the pleas as to the non-receipt of consideration and as to the exercise of undue influence were barred by the rule of res judicata inasmuch as it had been decided in a previous litigation between the same parties that the mortgage was good and valid to the extent of Rs. 3,252 which was exactly the amount claimed as principal in the present suit.

The Trial Court found that undue influence on the part of plaintiffs had not been established; that the principal sum claimed a sum of Rs. 1,672-3 only was within limitation, and that the pleas as to the non-receipt of consideration and the exercise of undue influence were not barred by res judicata. On the merits, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge found that it had not been proved that the mortgage was for consideration and as a result of this finding dismissed the plaintiff's suit in its entirety.

Against this decision the plaintiffs have preferred this first appeal to this Court through Bakhshi Tek Chand and we have heard Mr. Badri Das on behalf of the respondents.

The first contention raised by Bakhshi Tek Chand is, that the finding of the Court below on the question of res judicata is erroneous and that it should have been found that the pleas of the defendants with regard to the non-receipt of consideration and the exercise of undue influence were barred by section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code. In order to properly understand this contention it is necessary that a reference should be made to the history of the previous litigation between the parties. It appears that Mr. Jones dealt at the shop of the plaintiffs and also had money dealings with them. On the 17th October 1899 a sum of Rs. 3,252-3 was due on these accounts. On that day Rs. 747-13 are alleged to have been paid in cash and a mortgage-deed of her reversionary interest in Ayrcliffe estate executed by Mrs. Jones in favour of the plaintiffs. Interest on this mortgage was regularly paid for some time, but in May 1901 Mr. and Mrs. Jones executed a pro-note for Rs. 360 for six months arrears of interest. Of this sum Rs. 240 were paid off leaving Rs. 120. Interest was then again paid regularly for some time and then a pro-note for Rs. 420 was executed, the consideration for which was made up as follows:—

Rs. 120 balance due on the pro-note of May 1901.

Rs. 300 for interest on the mortgage-deed for five months October, November and December 1901, and January and February 1902.

This pro-note was executed in favour of one Devi Saran, who is said to have been a benamidar for the plaintiffs. On the 7th November 1910, Devi Saran brought a suit against Mrs. Jones for Rs. 1,087-4-3 principal and interest on the basis of this pro-note. In that suit it was pleaded by the defendant that the pro-note was without consideration; that the whole transaction was vitiated by undue influence, and that the debtor Mr. Jones had been over-reached by the plaintiffs who had manipulated the accounts and had made overcharges and had charged exorbitant interest. It was found in that case by the Trial Court that the consideration given to Mr. Jones for the mortgage was considerably less than Rs. 4,000, that Mrs. Jones had received nothing and that she had been forced to execute the mortgage under duress and that, therefore, it was bad for want of valid consideration. It was further found that the pro-note itself was bad inasmuch as the consideration alleged therein was not due. On appeal the learned Divisional Judge concurred in the finding of the Trial Court and held that the plaintiff in that suit had failed to establish a valid mortgage in favour of the present plaintiffs. There was a second appeal from this decision to the Chief Court and it was held by the learned Judges in their order dated the 24th May 1915 that the finding of the Courts below on the question of the validity of the mortgage was erroneous, and that the onus of proving want of consideration lay on the mortgagor, which had not been fully discharged. They found that, except for the sum of Rs. 747-13, which did not appear to have passed, there was no reason to suppose that the mortgage was not for consideration. The mortgage was accordingly held good to the extent of Rs. 3,252-3. As to undue influence the finding was in favour of the presen plaintiffs and it was held that no undue influence had been proved. The argument of Bakshi Tek Chand is, that the question of the validity of the mortgage was directly and substantially in issue in the previous case, and that as the parties in the two suits are the same, the findings arrived at in the previous suit as to want of consideration and exercise of undue influence operate as res judicata in the present suit. Mr. Badri Das, on the other hand, points out that the plea of res judicata was given up by the appellants in the Court below, nor has it been taken by them in the grounds of appeal to this Court and he consequently argues that they should not be allowed to raise this point in arguments.

We do not think there is any force in this contention. The point had been distinctly raised by the plaintiffs in their pleadings and an issue framed thereon. The case was then adjourned to a particular date for the evidence of the parties. On that date the Counsel of the parties appeared and stated that they did not want to produce any evidence on this issue and on certain other issues with which we are not concerned in the present appeal. At the time of arguments in the lower Court, plaintiffs' Counsel stated that the points were not barred by the rule of res judicata by reason of the first judgment and asked the Court to re-decide the issues as to the passing of the consideration and as to the validity of the mortgage in question. We do not think that an admission made by the plaintiffs' Counsel on a point of law can in any way bind them and if the opposite party has not in any way been prejudiced by such an admission there is no provision of law under which the plaintiffs can be prevented from taking up this point in arguments with the persmission of the Court even if it has not been taken in the grounds of appeal. The defendants were given full opportunity to produce any evidence they liked upon this issue in the Court below and they not having availed themselves of this opportunity cannot now have any cause for grievance. In our opinion the point goes to the root of the case and we do not see any reason why the plaintiffs should not be allowed to take it up now in arguments.

The only points to be considered in this connection are (1) whether the parties in the previous case were the same as in the present case, and (2) whether the point was directly and substantially in issue in the previous case. On the first question we have no hesitation in holding that the parties in the two cases are the same, and that Devi Saran in whose name the pro-note for Rs. 420 was executed and who instituted the previous suit was a benamidar for the plaintiffs. Chaudri Mal, one of the plaintiffs, was examined as a witness in the previous case and stated that Devi Saran was due nothing, that it was his (Chaudri Mal's) money, and that the pro-note was written in his name because he (Chaudhri Mal) was going away and he (Devi Saran) could recover in his absence. The defendant Mrs. Jones did not deny this fact in the previous suit and it was all along taken for granted by every one that the real plaintiffs in the previous case were the present plaintiffs and not Devi Saran. The learned Judges of the Chief Court also observed in their judgment that they noted that he (Chaudhri Mal) was the real plaintiff though Devi Saran in whose favour the pro-note stood was the nominal plaintiff. In order to find out whether the pro-note was or was not for consideration, the Court went into the previous accounts of the present plaintiffs and held that the pro-note had been executed on account of certain monies due on the mortgage executed in favour of the plaintiffs by the defendant Mrs. Jones. There is nothing on the record to show that Devi Saran was in any way personally interested in the pro-note and we think that it has been sufficiently established that the real beneficiaries of the pro-note were the present plaintiffs who, for the purposes of section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, must be held bound by the findings arrived at in the previous suit. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (1), that in a proceeding by or against the benamidar the person beneficially entitled is fully affected by the rules of res judicata. If Devi Saran was a benamidar for the present plaintiffs in the previous case and the present plaintiffs are bound by any findings arrived at in that suit, there is no reason why the defendant Mrs. Jones, who was also a party to the previous suit, should not be held equally bound by those findings. We hold that the present plaintiffs were parties to the previous case and that there is no substance in the defendants' contention that as the previous suit on the pro-note could not be maintained in their own names, the findings arrived at in that suit are not binding upon the parties.

As to the second question there can be no doubt whetever that the question now at issue between the parties was directly and substantially in issue in the previous case. The pro-note was executed on account of interest due on the mortgage now in question and the suit on the pro-note could not have been decreed unless the mortgage was found to be a valid mortgage. In order to determine the validity of the consideration for the pro-note it was necessary for the Court in the previous suit to determine the validity of the mortgage. Both the Courts below dismissed the suit because they found that the mortgage was not valid. The Chief Court decreed the suit in part because it was found that the mortgage was valid to the extent of Rs. 3,252-3. It is, therefore, clear that the question of the validity of the mortgage was directly and substantially in issue in the previous case, and the finding that no undue influence had been established and that the consideration to the extent of Rs. 3,252-3 was proved operates as res judicata in the present suit. It is argued by Mr. Badri Das that the only point at issue in the previous case was whether the pro-note was or was not for valid consideration and that in order to determine this point it was not at all necessary to determine the question of the validity of the mortgage. We are unable to accede to this contention. Under the mortgage-deed Mrs. Jones had incurred no personal liability. Under the pro-note she had become personally liable for the payment of Rs. 420 and interest. The question before the Court was what was the consideration for the pro-note for which Mrs. Jones had become personally liable. It was found that the consideration was the overdue interest on the mortgage-deed executed by Mrs. Jones which had not been paid by her in accordance with the terms of her contract. To find whether this was or was not a valid consideration for the pro-note it was absolutely necessary that a finding as to the validity of the mortgage on which the interest was claimed to be overdue should be arrived at. We, therefore, hold that the question of the validity of the mortgage was a question directly and substantially in issue between the parties in the previous case and that this question is now res judicata between them.

The next question for consideration is that of limitation. It is argued by Bakhshi Tek Chand that on the terms of the mortgage-deed the whole suit is within time and that in any case limitation is saved by certain acknowledements of liability made by the defendant Mrs. Jones in 1901 and 1904. Mr. Badri Das, on the other hand, contends that the suit as laid in the plaint was prima facie barred by limitation and that under O. VII, r. 6, Civil Procedure Code, the plaintiffs were bound to show in the plaint the ground upon which the exemption from the Law of Limitation was claimed. We think there is force in this contention. There is no reference in the plaint to the alleged acknowledgments of liability by the defendant so as to make section 19 applicable to the case and we do not, therefore, think that the plaintiffs are entitled to rely upon a ground of exemption from the Law of Limitation which was not contained in the plaint. The covenant in the mortgage-deed as to re-payments was to the effect that the mortgage-money with interest would be paid by monthly instalments of not less than Rs. 20 plus interest, the first payment being made on the 1st day of November 1899 and on the first day of every succeeding month provided that the entire advance together with interest thereon would be fully liquidated within ten years from the date of the mortgage. It was also agreed that defaults in payments of monthly instalments and interest as agreed should constitute separate cause of action. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has found that these monthly instalments fell due on the first of each month beginning from the 1st November 1899 and that as the suit was filed on the 31st May 1918 every instalment that fell due more than twelve years from that date was barred. In other words, his finding is that every instalment that had fallen due before the 31st May 1906 was barred by limitation. It is argued by Bakhshi Tek Chand that the terms of the mortgage-deed show that an option only was given to the mortgagor to pay up by instalments, and that it was not absolutely necessary for the mortgagee to have brought a suit for the recovery of each instalment within twelve years from the date of its default. In our opinion the view taken by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge upon this point is correct. By providing that default in the payment of each monthly instalment should constitute a separate cause of action the parties clearly intended that prompt payments should be made and that the period of limitation should run from the date of default unless the payee waived the benefit of the provision of prompt payment in case of default. In the present case there is no sufficient proof of of waiver. Except that the plaintiff did not sue there is nothing whatever in the present case which could be regarded as evidence of waiver. There is abundant authority for holding that mere forbearance to sue would not stop limitation from beginning to run. The case falls within the perview of Art. 132 of the Indian Limitation Act which provides twelve years' limitation from the time the money sued for became due. Applying this Article we hold that all the instalments prior to 31st May 1906 are time-barred and that of the principal sum claimed only Rs. 1,672-3 is within time as found by the Court below. The plaintiffs will be entitled to recover Rs. 1,672-3 principal with interest at the contract rate from the 31st May 1906 till realisation, to be realised from the sale of the mortgaged property. We accordingly accept the appeal, and setting aside the order of the Court below decree the plaintiffs' suit to the extent above indicated. The defendant shall also pay the costs of the plaintiffs in both Courts on the proportionate amount decreed.

Execution second appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 30th October 1922.

Mr. S. N. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an execution proceeding instituted by the decree-holder appellant against Musammat Mahmud Bano, the widow and legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, for the realisation of the decretal money by the attachment and sale of certain property. In pursuance of his application three houses were attached as the property of the deceased judgment-debtor. Musammat Mahmud Bano filed an objection that she held the houses in question as a mutwalli under a deed of endowment executed by her and her husband on the 7th of May 1911. The Court of first instance treated the objection as one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and, after examining the evidence adduced in the case, came to the conclusion that the deed of wakf in question had not been carried into effect and was not a genuine transaction. It further held that Musammat Mahmud Bano was not in possession of the houses in dispute as a mutwalli but she was in possession as the heir of her husband. From that decision there was an appeal to the District Judge, which was allowed without any question being raised or considered as to whether such an appeal was maintainable under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is urged here on behalf of the decree-holder appellant that no appeal lay to the District Judge because the capacity in which Musammat Mahmud Bano was claiming the release of the property in dispute from attachment was different from the capacity in which she had been impleaded as a party to the execution proceeding. Order XXI, r. 58 of the Code deals with objections which involve the determination of the question whether the property attached is liable to such attachment or not. A person who has been impleaded as a party to a decree or to an execution proceeding as the heir of a deceased debtor is a party to such decree or proceeding. If such a person claims to be in possession of the property attached not in his or her own right or in his or her right as a legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, but claims to be so in possession in his or her capacity as a mutwalli of an endowment, the objection can be considered under O. XXI, r. 60 of the Code, but, subject to the result of a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, the order passed thereon is conclusive. Section 47 contemplates questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to a suit or their representatives. A person who claims certain property as a mutwalli of a trust is not a representative of a judgment-debtor, though the author of the trust may have been the judgment-debtor himself, except where such trust is created after the suit or the decree passed therein.

In Nath Mal Das v. Tajammul Husain (1) where a judgment-debtor upon the attachment of certain land in execution of a decree passed against him personally by the Revenue Court instituted a suit for a declaration and establishment of his right to such land, not as his own property but as wakf, of which he claimed to be mutwalli or trustee, it was held that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was not suing in his own right but in his capacity as custodian, trustee or manager of the wakf property, he must be deemed to fill a character separate from that in which the decree in question was passed against him and section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure was inapplicable.

In Ramanathan Chettiar v. Levvai Marakayar (2) it was similarly held that a person claiming certain property alleged to have been set apart for charitable purposes as a trustee puts forward a claim which cannot be determined in a subsequent proceeding because the Court has in such cases to look to the substance of the objection and not to the claim that is put forward by one person rather than another. A person claiming a property under a trust made by a third person is not a representative of a party to the suit any more than a person claiming the property as a personal property when the decree passed against him charges him with liability as a trustee or in a representative character. And it would make no difference if the trust was created by the judgment-debtor himself prior to the execution of the suit which result in such a decree.

In Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (3) an objection by a judgment-debtor or his representative to the attachment or sale of certain property on the ground that he held the same in trust for some third person or a charitable institution was similarly held to be excluded from the operation of section 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure.

It is urged on behalf of judgment-debtor respondent that the real question for determination in the present case is, whether certain property forms a part of the assests of the deceased judgment-debtor. That is an aspect which presents itself in every case in which an objection to the attachment of any property, whether it is made by a third person or by the legal representative of the deceased debtor. The capacity in which the claimant seeks to have the attachment raised, however, determines the remedy, which is further open to him, if the objection is decided against him, or if the objector claims the said property as a trustee for a third person or a charitable institution, the claimant is not really a judgment-debtor or his legal representative but he represents such third person or charitable institution.

It is also urged that if no appeal lay to the Court below, no appeal would similarly lie here from the decree passed by that Court, but if the Court below assumed jurisdiction and passed a decree such a decree is as much open to a second appeal as a decree passed in a suit by a Court which has no jurisdiction to entertain that suit.

In Jwala Prasad v. Salig Ram (4) which was followed in Walayat Husain v. Ram Lal (5) it was held that where a Court of first appeal entertained an appeal in a case in which no appeal lay to that Court, a second appeal would lie to this Court from the order or decree passed in such an appeal.

In Bandiram Mookerjee v. Purna Chandra Roy (6) a similar view was taken. It is true that the decree-holder appellant raised no such objection in the lower Appellate Court, but where a question of jurisdiction is involved, he is not estopped from raising that objection here.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 481 OF 1923.
May 1, 1923.
Present :—Mr. Justice Campbell.
ATA MUHAMMAD—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
PIR KHAN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Copies applied for on day of judgment—Appeal—Limitation, computation of.

The day on which judgment is delivered must first be excluded in computing the period prescribed for filing an appeal and then the time requisite for obtaining the necessary copies must be excluded; that is to say, if copies are applied for on the day on which judgment is delivered, that day cannot be included in the period requisite for obtaining copies under section 12 of the Limitation Act.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 20th November 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Attock, dated the 4th April 1922.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Appellant.
Mr. M. Sleem, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal and its companion case, Appeal No. 482 of 1923, are barred by limitation. The decrees appealed from were passed on the 20th of November 1922. Applications for copies of the judgments and decrees were made the same day and the copies were supplied on the 28th of November. The appeals were filed in this Court on the 27th of February 1922, that is to say, on the 91st day from the 29th November.

The learned Counsel for the appellants has attempted to argue that the appeals are within time by the following calculation :—

10 days in November;
31 days in December;
31 days in January;
27 days in February;

99 days=Total
—9 days spent in obtaining copies.

90 days=result.

This result is, however, fallacious since it depends upon the 20th of November being excluded twice once as the day on which judgment was pronounced and the second time as one of the days requisite for obtaining copies. It is clear from section 12 of the Limitation Act that the day on which judgment is pronounced has to be excluded first and then the time requisite for obtaining copies has to be excluded. The learned Advocate for the appellants on this being pointed out to him has conceded that the appeals are one day out of time but he has asked me for indulgence under section 5 of the Limitation Act on the ground that his client had difficulty in raising the money for Counsel's fee and that communication between his clients and himself was interrupted by heavy rain at the end of February. He has exhibited a letter purporting to be from one of the appellants in which these matters are mentioned. I cannot, however, admit that due diligence has been shown by the appellants. They had their copies ready on the 28th of November and there is nothing to show that they were diligent from that day onward in taking steps to institute their appeals. I dismiss with costs both appeals as time-barred.

versus

BHAGWANA, MINOR, PER GURDHAN, HIS FATHER, AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Alienation—Consent of near reversioner—Remote reversioner, whether can challenge alienation.

A remote reversioner does not derive his right to challenge an alienation through a nearer reversioner, and when a nearer reversioner has placed himself in a position which disables him from challenging an unauthorised alienation, for instance, by acquiescing in or consenting to the alienation, it is open to a more remote reversioner to challenge it on his own account.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gurgaon, at Hissar, dated the 25th November 1919, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Gurgaon, dated the 17th April 1919.

Mr. N. C. Mehra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Beni Pershad Khosla, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit by reversioners for a declaration that a gift of ancestral property by Musammat Dakhan to her illegitimate son Bhagwana should not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs. The First Court granted the plaintiffs a decree, but the District Judge dismissed the suit on a ground not raised in the pleadings that the plaintiffs had been adopted into the family of Musammat Dakhan's late husband.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court, and on behalf of the respondents it is admitted that the ground on which the District Judge accepted the defendant's appeal was irrelevant. It is, however, contended that, inasmuch as a nearer reversioner Het Ram acquiesced in and accepted the gift made by Musammat Dakhan, that acceptance binds the plaintiffs to whom the reversion will open only on the extinction of Het Ram's line. This contention is opposed to all authority. The plaintiffs do not derive their rights through Het Ram, and when a nearer reversioner has placed himself in a position which disables him from challenging an unauthorised alienation, it is open to more remote reversioners to challenge it on their own account.

For these reasons we accept the appeal and restore the decree of the First Court with costs throughout in favour of the plaintiffs.

Abandonment—Submerged land—Non payment of rent—Remission of revenue—Intention to abandon.

Mere non-payment of rent or claiming or accepting remission of revenue for submerged land is not in itself proof of abandonment and, until it can be established that the holder of the tenure has abandoned his right to the submerged land, it remains intact. The question is one of intention to be determined by the circumstances of each case.

There is no law under which alluvial land can be regarded as an accession to a village unless it is a case of gradual accretion within the meaning of Bengal Regulation XI of 1825.

Plaintiffs asserted their rights to certain alluvial lands in 1853, 1884, 1894, 1899, 1901 and 1903 and the right was negatived on each occasion. They brought a suit to establish their title to the lands in 1904 but withdrew it. In 1919 they

I—Inherent powers of Court, when exercised—Consent of parties, whether can confer jurisdiction—Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), applicability of.*

When parties to a dispute refer it to a private arbitration without the intervention of a Court of Law, the Court has no jurisdiction to issue a Commission for the examination of witnesses in the matter referred to arbitration.

Rabiabai v. Rahimabai, 7 Bom. L. R. 560, and Hayward v. Mutual Reserve Assosiation, (1891) 2 Q. B. 236; 65 L. T. 491; 39 W. R. 624, distinguished.

The powers regarding the granting of Commissions for examination of witnesses are expressly given by the Code of Civil Procedure, the Indian Arbitration Act and the Rules of the High Court and do not depend upon any implied or alleged inherent powers of the Court.

Section 75 of the Code of Civil Procedure should be read subject to the rules in the First Schedule to the Code and cannot be read as giving a Court power to issue Commissions to examine anybody anywhere before any private person, whether or not any suit has been instituted.

The Arbitration Act (IX of 1890) does not apply to all cases and where certain events arise which are not covered by the Act, then the parties are left without any remedy and the Court has no jurisdicton to remedy the defects under the Arbitration Act.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), ss. 11, 14—Arbitration and award—Receipt of fees by arbitrators from parties prior to inquiry—Performance of ministerial acts by arbitrator in absence of one party—Misconduct—Statement of arbitrator as to what took place before him, whether conclusive.

Where parties are at variance as to what took place during the course of an inquiry before arbitrators, the proper course is to take the statement of the arbitrators as to the facts as prima facie representing the true state of affairs as to what took place at the time of inquiry, unless there is very strong reason for doubting the accuracy of the statement of the arbitrators as regards the facts which took place before them and within their competence.

The statement of a Judge holding an inquiry as to what took place before him is almost conclusive as regards those facts and there is no reason why, as regards a statement before arbitrators appointed by the parties themselves, there should be any less rigid stan ard applied when dealing with questions of fact, asserted by one side and denied by the other.

A party to an inquiry before an arbitrator cannot challenge it on the ground that opportunity was not given to him to call witnesses when he himself did not court opportunity by asking the arbitrators to call witnesses or adjourn the inquiry, for the examination of witnesses.

Where a lawful and reasonable fee has been agreed by the parties to be paid to an arbitrator, he is not guilty of misconduct in getting payment of such fee before the commencement of the inquiry.

Where an act judicial in character is to be performed, the arbitrators are bound by the same rules as bind the Courts and are not entitled to decide or give their award in the absence of one or more of the parties to the arbitration without notice to them.

But where the act done is not of a judicial nature but merely ministerial in its character, it is competent to one or all of the arbitrators to have it performed in the absence of one or more of the parties.

Anderson v. Wallace, (1835) 3 Cl. & F. 26; 6 E. R. 1347; Manindra Nath v. Mohanunda Roy, 13 Ind. Cas. 161; 15 C. L. J. 369, followed.

Where before the commencement of an arbitration inquiry, the arbitrators recorded statements of the case of, and received documents from, each of the parties to the inquiry in the absence of the other:

A suit for damages for alleged breach of contract can be stayed by a Court in a proper case pending reference to arbitration.

But it is open to the Court to decline to stay the action either by reason of the fact that there are charges of fraud, or by reason of the Court coming to the conclusion that in arbitration complete justice cannot be obtained between the parties, or for some other proper cause that the matter should be kept in Court rather than be referred to arbitration.

The rule of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is intended to be a strict one, which the Courts should not allow to be defeated or evaded.

Plaintiff, the thekadar of a patta in a certain estate, sued to recover arrears of rent on the basis of a lease. It appeared that defendant No. 1 took different leases from defendant No. 2 the proprietor of the estate and finally executed a new lease in respect of the whole of the area comprised in the previous kabuliyats. On the expiry of this kabuliyat, defendant No. 1 took a fresh settlement of the same land from the proprietor at a rental in kind the value of which was estimated at Rs. 61. A suit was brought in respect of this lease.

Held, that defendant No. 1 had acquired occupancy rights by this settlement and that by virtue of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, his rent must be taken to be the original cash rent;

(2) that the plaintiff's suit was an attempt to defeat the provisions of section 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and he was not entitled to get any rent other than the original cash rent.

Where more than 15 years have passed since the rents were last settled, the landlord of an occupancy holding is entitled to an enhancement if he can show that the rent paid by the raiyat in any particular case is below the prevailing rate paid by occupancy raiyats for lands of a similar description and with similar advantages in the same village or in neighbouring villages and that there is no sufficient reason for his holding at so low a rate.

The intention of the Legislature in section 30 clause (b) of the Bengal Tenancy Act appears to be that when a prevailing rate, whatever may be the exact meaning of that expression, has once been determined as stated in the section, the rate so found shall be deemed to be the prevailing rate unless it can be shown that the actual prevailing rate has risen by an increase in the rents in the village generally owing to a rise in the price of staple food crops.

The expression "prevailing rate" as used in section 31-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, must have the same meaning as the same expression when used in section 30, that is to say, it must be the prevailing rate paid by the occupancy raiyats for land of a similar description and with similar advantages in the same village or in neighbouring villages.

In ascertaining the prevailing rate regard must be had to the rents paid by occupancy raiyats holding similar lands in the whole of the village or in neighbouring villages and not to the rents paid by some of them only. Pat RAMJI RAM v. RAM KUMAR SINGH, (19 3) Pat. 345 5 P. In order to succeed in a suit for abatement of rent; brought under section 32 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff must show that there has been a diminution of area in the land held by him at the date of the suit.

In order to assess a fair rent upon a holding it is necessary for the Settlement Officer to ascertain what is the area held, and for this purpose he may either accept the area entered in the Record of Rights, or alter it after taking evidence. It is not necessary that a direct issue should be raised as to the area of the holding.

As the question of the determination of the area held forms the subject of proceedings taken before the Settlement Officer, under section 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the question of area cannot be again raised in a civil suit. Pat KESHO PRASAD SINGH v. BHAGWAT SARAN PANDE, (1924) Pat. 18; 5 P. A surrender of a non transferable holding by an occupancy raiyat to his landlord, where the raiyat has previously transferred a portion of the holding to another person, entitles the landlord to enter upon the whole holding and eject the transferee or to settle it with another tenant.

Per Miller, C. J.—The transfer of a non-transferable holding is not binding upon the landlord in the sense that it imposes upon him any obligation to recognise the transferee as his tenant.

The word "incumbrance" in section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act implies a subsidiary interest charged upon or carved out of a parent estate such as a lease, mortgage, charge, easement or other interest limiting the full rights of ownership in the estate to which it appertains. It is something which affects the quality of the parent estate making it something less than it was before the encumbrance was created.

Per Mullick, J.—The proper interpretation of section 86 of the Act is that, upon the surrender of an entire holding, the landlord is entitled to eject every occupant on the land except those protected by clause (6) of the section.

Per Jwala Prasad, J.—The sale of a portion or of an entire holding is not an incumbrance within the meaning of clause (6) of section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In a non-transferable holding the tenant has no right to transfer without the consent of the landlord and the transfer of the whole or part of it is invalid so for as the landlord is concerned. Pat SHEORAJI KUER v. DHANI MIAN, 4 P. Where there is a bona fide dispute between a landlord and the tenant as to the latter's possession of occupancy rights in the land and a compromise decree is passed in the suit on the admission of the tenant that no such rights exist, the tenant cannot subsequently contend that he, having as a matter of fact acquired occupancy rights in the land at the date of the compromise, the decree was not binding on him. To such a case section 178 of the Bengal Tenancy Act has no application. The section would be applicable if the occupancy right of the tenant was recognised and then given up by him under the compromise.

A compromise decree was passed in a suit brought by a landlord against the tenant in which there was a dispute about the existence of occupancy rights in the land in favour of the tenant. The compromise stated: "It has been settled between your petitioners, the plaintiff and the defendant, that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the land in suit," and further, "that your petitioner, the defendant, has given up his claim to the kashtkari right in the land decreed:"

Under section 13 (1) of the Burma Laws Act, where the Court has to decide any question regarding succession, inheritance, marriage, etc., the rule is that Buddhist Law is to apply in cases where the parties are Buddhists, except in so far as such law has by enactment been altered or abolished.

There may be cases where the facts and circumstances surrounding a gift necessitate the decision of a question regarding succession or inheritance and when that is the case, Burmese Buddhist Law must form the rule of decision.

A Burmese Buddhist cannot dispose of his property after his death by Will, and no Burmese Buddhist can, therefore, under the guise of making a gift, be allowed in effect to make a Will. He cannot set at naught the provisions of his personal law as to the inheritance of his property after his death. Where, therefore, his act in making a gift, owing to the circumstances in which it is made, or the conditions attached thereto, is such as to affect the succession to or inheritance of his property after his death, Buddhist Law must be resorted to, to arrive at a decision as to whether his action can be maintained or is invalid.

——— ss. 46 (2), 72—Mortgage by tenant—Surrender—Landlord, whether bound by mortgage.

The provisions contained in section 72 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act are similar to those contained in section 86 of the Bengal Tenancy Act with this difference that the provision contained in clause (6) of the latter section does not find a place in the former section; and this omission leaves the power of surrender conferrred by section 72 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act unhampered by the existence of any incumbrance over the property.

Therefore, in spite of a prior sale or mortgage by a raiyat of his holding, he is free to exercise his right of surrender of the holding in favour of the landlord, for, under clause (2) of section 46 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, no transfer by a raiyat of his right in his holding or any portion thereof is binding on the landlord unless it is made with his consent in writing.

Whatever the value of a transfer by a raiyat of his non-transferable holding be so far as the transferee or any other person in the world is concerned, it is absolutely to be ignored and considered to be non-existent so far as the landlord is concerned. The landlord is the owner of the property, and the raiyat's interest is carved out of it only for limited purposes and the right of reversion which the landlord undoubtedly has in the land cannot be affected except by express statutory provision. That reversion is recognised in the right which accrues to the landlord by an abandonment of the holding or by a voluntary surrender by the tenant who willingly yields up to him the limited right which was carved out. Therefore, it is immaterial that the transfer is for valuable consideration and the surrender for no consideration at all.

The principle that a person cannot be permitted to derogate from his own grant is not of universal application and cannot apply to the case of a landlord where, by a bona fide surrender by the tenant, he acquires a statutory right of re-entry into the land which was originally demised in favour of the tenant.

No equitable considerations would arise in favour of a transferee of a non-transferable holding for he, with his eyes open and knowing the limited interest of the tenant and his unquestionable right under sections 72 and 73 of surrender and abandonment—the holding being non-transferable without the consent of the landlord—takes the grant. He must, therefore, have foreseen the possible result of surrender, or abandonment, by the tenant. There is no reason why the landlord should be prejudiced unless he is a party to any fraud or dishonesty committed by his raiyat in surrendering the holding. Fat RAM URAON v. DOMAN KALAL, 4 P. The definition of "legal representative" in section 2 (11) of the Civil Procedure Code is only for the purposes of procedure in instituting and defending suits and cannot affect the rules of substantive law.

It is true that when a person intermeddles with the property of a deceased person he must be regarded as a legal representative of the deceased for the purposes of procedure to the extent of the property with which he has intermeddled, but there is no principle of law which makes him the representative of the deceased so far as success on to the property of the deceased is concerned.

The mere fact that an intermeddler is joined as a party to a suit for recovery of possession cannot make a decree in that suit in any way binding on the real heir who is not a party to that suit, and who later on gets a decree against the intermeddler declaring his superior right. A LALSA RAI v. UDIT RAI 114

A preliminary decree in a redemption suit provided that if the plaintiff failed to pay the amount mentioned in the decree within the time limited "he shall be debarred from all right to redeem the property." Nothing further was done under the decree either by the plaintiff or by the defendant:

Held, that a second suit by the plaintiff to redeem the property was not barred by res judicata by virtue merely of the clause in the previous decree having the right of redemption, as there was no final determination in that suit of the issue whether the plaintiff's failure to pay the redemption price within the period fixed by the Court would terminate the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee and further as such an adjudication was not necessary for the decision of the suit.

A preliminary decree in a redemption suit ought not to direct more than that if the plaintiff makes a default, the mortgagee should have a right to ask for a final decree for foreclosure or sale as provided by r. 8 of O. Where a decree has been improperly passed, the proper and convenient course is for the party aggrieved to go to the Court that granted the decree and get it set aside by that Court.

Before a Court can entertain a suit for a declaration that a decree granted by another Court is not binding on the plaintiff it must be shown that there is a cause of act on within the jurisdiction of the Court.

In execution of a money-decree certain properties of the judgment-debtor were attached and their sale was ordered, but the execution petition was dismissed as there were no bidders at the sale. A second execution petition was then filed with a prayer for attachment. The decree-holder was ordered to produce schedules. This was not done and the petition was dismissed. A day before the date of this dismissal the judgment-debtor granted two mortgages on the properties which were the subject of attachment. A third execution was thereafter filed, the properties were attached and sold and the sale was confirmed. In a suit by the mortgagee to enforce the mortgage as against the auction-purchaser:

Held, that neither the first nor the second order of dismissal of the execution petitions was on account of 'default' of the decree-holder within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code, and, therefore, on the date of the mortgage, the original attachment on the first petition was subsisting in favour of the plaintiff and, this being so, the alienation was void as against the auction-purchaser.

The default of the decree-holder under O. Order XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code is applicable only to cases in which the stage of attachment has been passed and in which the Court is conscious that the next stage is intended and is not applicable to an abnormal case where no one concerned, neither the party nor the Court, is conscious of the true facts and where, if there is in fact an attachment, the party and Court are not aware of it and are proceeding as though there were none. ——— ss 109 (c), 110——"Decision," meaning of—High Court reversing findings but affirming decision of Trial Court, effect of—Combined effect of several factors—High Court, whether will certify appeal.

The term "decision" in the last clause of section 110, Civil Procedure Code, means the decree or order passed, and not the reasons given for passing such decree or order.

Where the decree of a Trial Court is affirmed on appeal by the High Court, it is not necessary that the judgment of affirmance should be based on precisely the same reasons as those given by the Trial Court. The mere circumstance, therefore, that there are no concurrent findings of fact would not remove the case from the last clause of section 110 of the Civil Procedure Code, and so relieve the person applying for leave to His Majesty in Council from showing that some substantial question of law was involved in the appeal.

Where an Appellate Court permits an issue which had been given up to be re-opened, and allows in the appellate stage further evidence to be taken, that in itself is not a sufficiently substantial question of law to entitle an applicant to appeal to His Majesty in Council, especially where the applicant was in no way prejudiced by the procedure adopted by the Appellate Court Clause (c) of section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code imposes no limitation to the cases in which a High Court may certify a case as a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, but the power given by that clause ought to be used very sparingly.

Where, in a case (a) the property involved is of very large value, (b) the decision of the High Court is based upon findings of fact which reversed the findings of the Trial Court, (c) the evidence upon which the High Court acted was not all before the Trial Court, and (d) a question of procedure of somewhat unusual character is involved, and it is possible that a higher Tribunal might take a different view in respect thereto:

Held, that the combined effect of these matters was such that the High Court ought to exercise its power under section 109 and certify the case as a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. Pat BARO BAHADUR MAN SINGH v. NAWLAKHBATI, 5 P. L. T. 17; 2 P. L. R. 48 58

In a suit by a Hindu widow in possession of her husband's estate the defendants contended that the suit was not maintainable because a previous suit commenced by the predecessors-in-interest of the plaintiff had abated under O XXII, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code. It was also urged that as the plaintiff had, during the pendency of the suit, adopted a son it was incumbent upon her to bring upon the record as plaintiff the name of the minor boy she had adopted. Both these contentions were overruled and the suit was eventually decreed by the High Court. The defendant then applied for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council:

In execution of a decree the judgment-debtor was arrested. He then paid a portion of the decree-debt and as regards the balance put in an application under O. XXI, r. 40, Civil Procedure Code, that he might be released from custody on security being given for re-appearance. A security-bond was executed by which the sureties undertook to produce the judgment-debtor on a day fixed, in default they were to be liable for the balance under the decree. The original execution application was thereafter treated as closed. On the day fixed, however, the judgment-debtor was not produced. The decree-holder thereupon applied by petition for warrants against the judgment-debtor and the sureties for the balance under the decree; but under the direction of the Court the decree-holder amended the relief into one directing the sureties to produce the judgment-debtor at a future date and in default to issue warrants against the sureties, stating at the same time that the sureties had committed default in producing the judgment-debtor and had rendered themselves liable for the decretal amount. The Court ordered the arrest of the sureties on the petition under section 145, Civil Procedure Code. On the application of the sureties thereupon to cancel the said order;

(3) that the terms of the surety-bond for production of the judgment-debtor on a particular day, not having been complied with, the sureties had rendered themselves liable for the decretal amount and the order of execution against them as finally passed under section 145, Civil Procedure Code, was not open to any legal objection. On the application of the parties, a suit was referred to three arbitrators and it was agreed that the award of the majority would be binding. One of the arbitrators disagreed with the award made by the other two and the Trial Court set it aside on the ground that it did not seem to be reasonable. It cannot be laid down as a general principle in all cases that an alternative claim necessarily prejudices, embarrasses or delays the fair trial of a case.

The whole object of the procedural law is to prevent multiplicity of suits and a plaintiff should not be compelled to institute a second suit if he can obtain appropriate relief in the first suit without in any way embarrassing the defendant.

Owen v. Morgan, (1887) 35 Ch. D. 492; 56 L. J. Ch. 603; 56 L. T. 503; 35 W. R. 705, relied on.

Plaintiffs sued for rescission of an agreement for sale and for an order upon the defendants to refund the sum of money paid by them to the defendants towards the performance of the agreement. Subsequently, the plaintiffs applied for amendment of the plaint asking for a decree for specific performance of the agreement in the event of the Court finding it impossible to give them a decree for its rescission.

Held, that the causes of action could be conveniently tried or disposed of together if the application for amendment of the plaint was allowed and the alternative relief would not prejudice, embarrass or delay the fair trial of the case. The fact that the plaintiff applied and failed to have an ex parte decree set aside under O. IX, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code does not prevent him from maintaining an action for setting aside the decree on the ground of fraud, and incidentally proving, as an index of the fraud, that summons was not served on him in the previous suit.

The failure to serve summons on a defendant may be accidental or deliberate; and where the Court finds as a fact, that there was no foundation for the suit itself, it is open to the Court to hold that the suppression of the summons was deliberate with the object of snatching a decree from the Court in the absence of the defendant. Pat JANKI KUER v. THAKUR RAI (1923) Pat. 336: 5 P. ——— O. XVI, r. 1—Witnesses, summoning of —Court, duty of.

Under O. XVI, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code a party has an absolute right to summon witnesses and, so long as he pays the necessary expenses, to insist that their attendance shall be enforced. It does not matter that a party had himself originally undertaken to bring the witnesses and has failed to do so, nor does it matter that the application is made at such a late stage of the proceedings that the witnesses cannot be present in Court before the final disposal of the suit. The Court may in either of those cases refuse to adjourn the hearing for the attendance of the witnesses, but it has no power to refuse to issue summonses. The only case in which the Court has power to refuse to issue summonses is, where the application is not made bona fide or where in the exercise of its inherent powers to prevent the abuse of its own process it is necessary to refuse to issue the summons. L PRITAM SINGH v. SOBHA SINGH 866

Phul Koer v. Hashmat Ullah Khan, 29 Ind. Cas. 553; 37 A. 460; 13 A. L. J. 679, followed.

There can, strictly speaking, be no ex parte proceedings against any defendant who has entered an appearance and filed a defence.

In a suit for possession of land, all the defendants combined to file a written statement, issues were framed and a date fixed for the evidence of the parties. When the case came on for hearing only one defendant, R, was present who asked for an adjournment. The Court made an order that if R. would deposit a certain sum of money within two hours, the adjournment would be allowed. The money was not paid. Then, after taking the plaintiff's evidence, the Court decreed his suit. Another defendant, D, then applied under O. IX, r. 13, Civil Procedure Code, to have the decree set aside:

Held, that, although strictly speaking there could be no ex parte proceedings against a defendant who has entered an appearance and filed a defence, yet under the circumstances as the Court could not have delivered a judgment under O. XVII, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, it must be deemed to have taken action under O. IX of the Code and its judgment and decree should be treated as ex parte proceedings liable to be set aside under O. IX, r. 13 of the Code. A RAM CHARAN LAL v. RAGHUBIR SINGH, 21 A. L. In execution of a decree, certain properties were attached and ordered to be sold. But before the sale actually took place, the judgment-debtor died. The sale went on and was completed without any one being added to the record as the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor. No application under rr. 89, 90 or 91 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code was made and the sale was confirmed under r. 92 and a sale certificate issued to the auction-purchaser. The legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor did not challenge the validity of the sale. In a suit by the reversioner of the deceased to declare the sale a nullity on the ground that at the time of sale the estate was not represented by any one:

Held, that the sale could not be regarded as a nullity as the failure to add the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor was only an irregularity, which, if substantial injury had been caused thereby, would only entitle the party affected to institute proceedings to set aside the sale within the period prescribed by law.

Per Spencer, J.—If an order is passed by an Executing Court against a party without notice being given to him of the application which gave rise to the proceedings, the party behind whose back such proceedings are taken will not be bound by the order.

Where process is issued without the notice which O. XXI, r. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code prescribes in cases where the judgment-debtor is dead or the decree is more than one year old, the want of notice might constitute a material irregularity entitling a person whose interests are affected to apply under O. XXI, r. 90 or to bring a suit to have the sale set aside. But where the decree-holder has done all that the law requires him to do and the judgment-debtor or one of several judgment-debtors happens to die during the course of the execution of the sale warrant, the sale cannot be invalidated by the accident of the judgment-debtor's death before the sale is completed.

The law only prescribes the issue of notice to judgment-debtors or their legal representatives at the commencement of execution proceedings, and the latter cannot claim as a matter of right to have fresh notice if their representation of the deceased's estate commences during the progress of the carrying out of the processes of the Court nor are they justified in treating such processes as invalid for want of jurisdiction on the part of the Court and its officers.

Order XXII, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code is inapplicable to the execution proceedings.

——— O. XXI, rr. 54, 90—Execution sale—Inquiry into validity of proclamation before sale—Subsequent application to set aside sale—Res judicata—Enfranchised sirotriem land whether land paying revenue to Government—"Revenue," meaning of.

The Code of Civil Procedure does not provide for any inquiry into the validity of the publication of a sale until after the sale has been held. If the Court does hold such an inquiry it must be regarded as having done so for its own satisfaction.

Where an inquiry is not prescribed by law but is undertaken by the Court only to decide on a collateral matter there is no security for the Court's application of the standard of proof appropriate to a judicial proceeding or for its having acted judicially and for its decision being a judgment.

The policy of the law is to postpone the consideration of the objections to the publication and conduct of a sale until after it has been held, when the essential issue whether loss has been caused can also be tried.

Where, after a proclamation of sale, an application was made by the judgment-debtor to postpone the sale and the Court, while allowing the sale to proceed, held an inquiry and found that the publication of the sale proclamation was proper:

Held, that the order was not a sufficient answer to, nor did it operate as res judicata in, a later application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code to set aside the Court sale on the ground of fraud and material irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale.

A sirotriem village paying quit-rent or jodi to Government is land paying "revenue" to Government within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 54 of the Civil Procedure Code, and where such a village is brought to sale in Court auction, notice of sale ought to be affixed in the Collector's Office under O. XXI, r. 54, read with r. 67, of the Code.

Per Devadass, J.—The word "revenue" in r. 54 of O. Where an execution proceeding is struck off at the request of the decree-holder, this amounts to a dismissal for default of the decree-holder within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 57 of the Civil Procedure Code and the attachment ceases to exist.

XXI of the Code.

During the pendency of an application by a judgment-debtor to set aside an execution sale one of the decree-holder auction-purchasers died and his legal representatives were not properly substituted in his place and no notice was served upon them. Eventually the sale was set aside:

(2) that, however, the judgment-debtor could not succeed unless he could show that the decree was incapable of execution against him and the other surviving judgment-debtors;

An omission to set aside the abatement of a suit before bringing on record the heirs of a deceased defendant is a mere formal defect not affecting the merits of the case.

A delay in making an application to bring on record the heirs of a deceased defendant, due to a change in the period of limitation, of which the applicant was ignorant, can be rightly excused.

Where a suit is compromised, but the compromise relates to properties some of which are not the subject of the suit, the proper procedure for the Court recording the compromise is to record the whole of the agreement, and then to pass a decree in accordance with so much of it as relates to the subject-matter of the suit.

A suit relating to immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100 was compromised and the parties agreed to divide the property in dispute and some other property in certain proportions. The agreement was reduced to writing and was presented to the Court. The Court made an order thereon to the effect that as the compromise related to property outside the scope of the suit a decree could not be passed upon it, and the suit was dismissed "in accordance with the compromise." In a subsequent suit to enforce the compromise:

Held, (1) that the procedure adopted by the Court in recording the compromise in the previous suit was erroneous and that it should have recorded the whole compromise and then passed a decree in accordance with so much of it as related on the property in dispute;

(2) that the compromise not having been incorporated in the decree or order of the Court, was not admissible in evidence for want of registration.

O. whether the advance was made by the plaintiffs out of their separate funds or whether it was part of the family property. They sued to recover the principal and interest and asked for the realisation of the same by the sale of the mortgaged property:

(2) that the question was simply one of authority; if the plaintiffs were authorised to enter into the transaction on behalf of the family, it must be taken that they were equally authorised to institute a suit to enforce it. Pat HIT LAL MAHTON v. JIBOO MAHTON 378

——— O. XXXIX, r. 1—Injunction, ad interim—Prima facie case—Balance of convenience—Adjournment—Counsel, duty of, to argue.

Where a plaintiff asks the Court to grant an ad interim injunction against the defendant during the hearing of the suit, he must show that prima facie he is entitled to succeed in his claim on the merits. The Court should in such a case see as well on which side lies the balance of convenience. Where the defendant has spent a large sum of money which would be wasted if the injunction is granted and the defendant is a man of means and any damage likely to be done by him can be recovered from him if the plaintiff succeeds in his claim the balance of convenience is against the grant of the injunction.

——— O. XXXIX, r. 2—Temporary injunction, when to be granted—Election, Municipal, suit to contest, validity of—Injunction restraining defendant from exercising functions of Municipal Commissioner, whether can be granted.

A person asking the Court to exercise its discretionary jurisdiction by granting a temporary injunction must make out a strong prima facie case in support of the title which he asserts, and must satisfy the Court that its interference is necessary to protect him from irreparable or, at least, serious injury before the legal right can be established at the trial. Being an exceptional remedy, an injunction will be refused in the first instance except upon a clear prima facie case and upon positive averments of the equities on which the application for relief is based.

In a suit contesting the validity of a Municipal election, the plaintiff applied for a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from exercising the functions of a Municipal Commissioner during the pendency of the suit:

Held, that the plaintiff could in no way be injured by the defendant continuing to act as a Municipal Commissioner during the pendency of the suit and a temporary injunction could not, therefore, be granted. L RAMESHWAR DAS v. YAKIN-UD-DIN KHAN 428

——— O. XLI, r. 19—Appeal—Dismissal for default—Appeal, fresh, whether can be entertained—Res judicata—Landlord and tenant—Non-transferable occupancy holding—Sale in execution of money-decree.

An order dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution does not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and can in no sense be regarded as adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognises authoritatively that the appellant has not complied with the condition under which the appeal was open to him and, therefore, is in the same position as if he had not appealed at all.

An order dismissing an appeal for default does not amount to a decree and does not operate as res judicata. R. 19 of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code gives an option to an appellant whose appeal has been dismissed for default to apply for re-admission of the appeal, but it does not take away any other remedy that may be available to him. The omission of a provision as to the competency of a fresh appeal in the rule cannot have the effect of taking away such right, if it is not otherwise barred.

There is nothing in law to prevent the entertainment of a fresh appeal on the dismissal for default of a previously filed appeal, provided the later appeal is otherwise in order and is filed within the period of limitation.

Commissions—Commissioner, duty of—Fees, recovery of, mode of—Mortgage-bond obtained in lieu of fees, whether enforceable.

It is entirely contrary to the duty of a Commissioner to approach an individual party and get him to pay sums of money in discharge of an untaxed bill of costs upon the footing that, unless this is done, the report will not be filed. A Commissioner's duty is to keep all parties at arm's length, to receive no favour from any one, to look to one no more than to another.

The work done by a Commissioner is not work done for any of the parties; it is work done for the Court. If the Commissioner wants the payment of his fees he must look to the Authority that appointed him and whose duty it is to put proper pressure on the right party and to provide for an adequate remuneration for the Commissioner in a reasonable and proper way. For the Commissioner himself to put any sort of pressure on one party so as to make the immediate payment of an untaxed bill a condition without which the Commissioner's duty would not be done or would be done at another time is not merely ill-advised conduct; it is improper and illegal conduct.

A mortgage-bond obtained by a Commissioner from one of the parties in lieu of payment of an untaxed bill of costs is an improper advantage obtained by an Officer of Court by abuse of his position as such Officer and is not enforceable.

Compromise—Decree in accordance with compromise, when binding—Partition, suit for—Preliminary decree not appealed against, effect of—Final decree, whether can be attached—Appeal—Preliminary decree not capable of enforcement—Procedure.

There can be no compromise binding upon all the parties to a partition suit until and unless all the parties have joined in the compromise.

Compromise—concld.

It is not open to an appellant in an appeal against the final decree in a partition suit to attack the preliminary decree, which might have been directly challenged by an appeal.

Loke Nath Singh v. Gaju Singh, 31 Ind. Cas. 426; 22 C. L. J. 333; 20 C. W. N. 178.

In a suit for partition of joint properties, a petition of compromise was filed stating that certain specified properties were self-acquired of one or other of the parties and claiming partition of what was admitted to be joint. Two of the defendants did not join in the petition. A preliminary decree was passed in terms of the compromise, when the actual petition was undertaken those two defendants objected, but their objection was overruled and a final decree was made in accordance with the terms of the compromise. The defendants appealed:

Held, that as all the parties to the suit did not join in the compromise it was not binding, but that since the defendants had not challenged the preliminary decree, they could not appeal against the final decree;

(2) that since, however, the preliminary decree as it stood was indefinite and not capable of enforcement, the final decree must be vacated. C TARAPRASANNA SARKAR v. KALIKAMOHAN SARKAR, 38 C. L. J. 111; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 80 319

Confession—Retracted confession, value of—Particulars necessary to be established—Shy witness, statement of, whether can be transferred to Sessions record—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 154.

It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by a prisoner cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence.

A Court must not regard the confession of an accused person in the same light as an admission made by parties in civil litigation.

What has to be seen in the case of a confession is (1) whether the same was made voluntarily, i.e., whether the disqualifying conditions given in section 24 of the Evidence Act were absent, and (2) whether, if so, the confession is true as tested by the circumstances in which it was made, its internal evidence of truth and its consistency with other evidence. It cannot be laid down that independent evidence in the sense of evidence corroborating the details of the crime itself is obligatory.

A statement of a witness made before the Committing Magistrate cannot be transferred to the Sessions Record simply on the ground that the witness was "shy and speechless."

Section 154 of the Evidence Act gives a very wide discretion to the Courts and the proper course in such a case is to give permission to the prosecution to ask the witness a leading question and then to read out the evidence before the Comitting Magistrate and so obtain an admission or a denial of its truth. Pesh MOTI RAM v. EMPEROR, 24 Cr. Construction of document—Charitable trust—Hindu Law—Trustee, failure to appoint, effect of.

Under the Hindu Law a trust cannot fail for want of the appointment of trustees and the Court will appoint a manager on the failure to appoint of those entitled to appoint him.

A deed of partition contained the following clause:—

"One house (shiwala) with shops under it and Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand rupees), out of the whole heritage of the deceased have been set apart for charitable purposes as wak property. The said Rs. 10,000 is to be spent as follows;—

		Rs.

(b)	for the construction of a shiwala	1,000
(c)	for the expenses in connection with the sati of the family..	1,000
	Total ..	10,000"

Held, (1) that the intention of the executants of the deed was to create a public and charitable endowment in respect of the immoveable property and the cash;

(2) that the intention was that the cash should not be consumed, but that the income or interest only should be spent on maintaining the wakf. L KIDAR NATH v. WAZIR CHAND 903

——— "Construction," meaning of—Second appeal—Decision as to meaning of words, whether can be challenged in second appeal.

The expression "construction", as applied to a document, includes, first, the meaning of the words used in the document; and, secondly, their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. The former is, in all cases, a question of fact, while the latter is a question of law.

From this day she shall be competent to realise from the debtors under notes of hand or bonds, etc., the principal with interest either amicably or by law suit." The Schedule (ka) gave certain lands, "Cultivated in nij jote—Value Rs. 299." The Schedule (kha) gave, "Amounts due from various persons on account of money-lending business:—Out of the same Rs. 100 due from N. under a mortgage-bond." The deed wound up by saying, "This deed of gift is executed in respect of Rs. 399, being the value of the properties of Schedule (ka) and the dues from debtor mentioned in Schedule (kha)." It was common ground that the words, "cultivated in nij jote—Value Rs. 299," in Schedule (ka) and the words, "Out of the same Rs. 100 due from N. under a mortgage-bond," were interpolated by or with the authority of the donor after the remainder of the deed was written. The contention of the daughter was that these two passages were inserted in the deed for the purpose of ascertaining and specifying the stamp duty which was payable in respect of the deed, and that the deed in fact transferred to her all the debts which were due in respect of the money-lending business:

Held, rejecting the contention, that the natural and obvious meaning of the deed was that the donor intended to make a gift of the one particular debt specified in the deed, namely the debt due from N. and not of all the debts due in respect of the money-lending business. Held, that the stipulation for the monthly payment of rent did not affect the plaintiff's right to serve a week's notice of ejectment on the defendant at any time, and that it was not necessary that the notice should terminate on the last day of a month.

——— Relinquishment by landlord of right to produce of trees of occupancy tenant—Relinquishment for life or in perpetuity—Grant without words of inheritance—Grant "for ever"—Presumption.

The proprietor of a Raj executed in 1858 a document in the nature of a parwana addressed to the managers of his estate which, after reciting that a certain occupancy tenant had done great good work, proceeded, "Hence because of that good work it is ordered that whatever trees have been planted by his (the occupancy tenant's) ancestor and also if he plants any, the share of the Raj in them is given up. Hence this parwana is written to all forbidding you in any way to interfere with the trees standing on the nakdi holding of the said occupancy tenant for ever." A descendant of the executant of the document brought in 1916 a suit against a descendant of the occupancy tenant for a half share in the trees standing upon the later's holding. There was no evidence to show that any claim had ever been made by the proprietor of the Raj to participate in the produce of the trees since the document was executed excepting once when by forcible means and under duress the tenant was obliged to disgorge a small sum of money:

Held, (1) that although the meaning of the document was not very clear, the intention of the executant was to relinquish the right to the trees both present and future as was borne out by the concluding words of the document which forbade his servants from interfering with the trees on the holding for ever;

(2) that this interpretation was in consonance with what had actually taken place since the execution of the document;

(3) that the absence of any words of inheritance in the document was of no significance, as it was not a grant of land to a grantee, the so-called grantee being already an occupancy holder of the land having a permanent interest in the land descendible to his heirs.

Even if a grant contains the word "always" or the words "for ever" or similar words, if the grant is clearly of a life-interest only, the mere use of such words will not have the effect of extending the grant beyond the lifetime of the grantee.

Where there are no words of limitation in a grant then, even if there are no specific words of inheritance, it may still be a grant in perpetuity. Pat MAHARAJ RAI v. JANKI KUER 1031

——— s. 62—Novation—Hundi executed in lieu of prior hundi—Suit on subsequent hundi not maintainable—Creditor whether can fall back on prior hundi—Cancellation, effect of—Negotiability, whether affects liability.

The question as to the negotiability or non-negotiability of an instrument is quite distinct from the question of a party's discharge from liability to the holder, and the liability of the drawer of a bill of exchange or of any subsequent party thereto is not in any way affected by the document being negotiable or otherwise. Nor can a mere cancellation of a bill of exchange have the effect of discharging a party from liability unless it is made with the express intention of discharging that party, for if it is made unintentionally or is made under a mistake it will be inoperative.

Where a hundi is executed in lieu of a prior hundi it is a question of fact in each case whether the parties intended the execution of the subsequent hundi as absolute or conditional discharge of the prior hundi, the presumption being that the debt is only conditionally discharged.

Where an insufficiently stamped hundi is given in renewal of a prior hundi and a suit on the basis of the subsequent hundi is held not to be maintainable, the creditor can fall back upon the prior hundi and section 62 of the Contract Act is not a bar to his doing so.

For the purposes of jurisdiction, the value of the subject-matter of a suit to set aside an award is the actual value of the interest affected by the award, and involved in the suit. The plaintiff in such a suit is not at liberty to arbitrarily place his own valuation on the relief he seeks. Thus, where an award directs the payment by a person of a particular sum of money, and he institutes a suit to have the award set aside, the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the amount which he is directed by the award to pay.

Clause (3) of section 439 of the Criminal Procedure Code limits the power of enhancement and lays down that where the sentence dealt with under the section has been passed by a Magistrate acting otherwise than under section 34 of the Code, the Court shall not inflict a greater punishment for the offence, which in the opinion of such Court, the accused has committed, than might have been inflicted for such offence by a Presidency Magistrate of the First Class. This limitation does not apply to a sentence which has been passed by a Magistrate acting under section 34 of the Code.

At the same time, except in very exceptional cases, a sentence by the High Court under its powers of enhancement should not, where the sentence has been imposed by a Magistrate, exceed one of seven years' rigorous imprisonment, which a Magistrate acting under section 34 has power to pass, the usual course when a Court thinks that a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment would not meet the ends of justice would be to set aside the trial and order the case to be committed to the Court of Session. The words "after recording its reasons in writing" in section 90 of the Criminal Procedure Code are not imperative but directory.

A warrant which, on the face of it, is a good and valid warrant, is signed by the Magistrate, sealed with the seal of the Court addressed to a Police Officer, and which states the reason upon which the Magistrate relied, is not invalid merely by reason of the fact that the Magistrate has omitted to record in writing, otherwise than in the warrant, the reason which actuated him to issue the warrant.

N. R. Chatterjea, J.—(dissenting)—Section 90 requires not merely the statement in the form of the warrant that the Court has good and sufficient reasons but these reasons should be stated. The word "involve" in section 106 of the Code connotes the inclusion not only of a necessary but also of a probable feature, circumstance, antecedent condition or consequence.

In many cases where in orders there has been irregularity of form but where it appears that no harm would be done to the parties, although by a wrong method a right result may have been reached, it is undesirable that the High Court should exercise its discretionary jurisdiction in revision.

Upon a Police report a Magistrate recorded an order under section 144, Criminal Procedure Code, and issued notice to the parties to show cause. On the date fixed for hearing proceedings were drawn against one party under section 107 of the Code and a date was fixed for showing cause why they should not be bound over. This party applied to the District Magistrate to set aside this order. Without issuing any notice to the other party the District Magistrate set aside the preliminary order under section 107 and directed that proceedings be taken under section 145 of the Code. Proceedings were taken up accordingly and the party applied to the High Court in revision:

Evidence of mere suspicion of a person having taken part in certain criminal offences is not evidence of general repute within the meaning of section 117, clause (3), Criminal Procedure Code.

In order to bind a person down in security to be of good behaviour under section 110 of the Criminal Procedure Code, there should be evidence in which the accused is proved to have been concerned in certain criminal cases, or some direct evidence to establish his complicity in such cases; the evidence ought to be of such a nature as to lead to a reasonable and definite ground for coming to the conclusion that the accused is a habitual thief.

When proceedings under section 110 are taken against a person and he is able to produce witnesses on his behalf to speak of his good character, the Court ought to pay particular attention to such evidence and should find substantial reasons for not believing the evidence before it makes an order.

It is not always incumbent upon a Magistrate trying a case under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to give effect to the decision of a Civil or Criminal Court, and no hard and fast rule can be laid down in this respect.

Where, in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, one of the parties files a written statement, and that statement is supported by his own evidence in Court, the Magistrate, in relying upon the written statement, does not act without jurisdiction; nor does he do so in not accepting a decision in a previous case of rioting as to possession.

It is in the discretion of the Magistrate in a proceeding under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code to take further evidence, if he thinks it is necessary to do so. In execution of a decree obtained against the predecessor-in-interest of the first party to the proceedings under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, a tank and a house were purchased at an auction-sale by the second party. The auction-purchasers obtained possession of the tank in November 1918 through the Civil Court five days before the death of the judgment-debtor. It was found, however, that, notwithstanding the delivery of possession, the first party continued to be in possession up to the day when proceedings were instituted. It was found further that the auction-purchaser took possession of the residential house in May 1920 but that on the date when the proceedings were instituted and for more than two months preceding that date the members of the first party were in possession:

Held, (1) that so far as the tank was concerned, the Magistrate ought to have declared the first party and not the second to have been in possession;

(2) that so far as the house was concerned there must have been a dispossession of the auction purchasers giving rise in their favour to a fresh cause of action and the Magistrate should have declared the first party to be in possession.

A Magistrate in deciding the question of possession under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is not in every case bound by the previous order of a Civil or Criminal Court relating to the possession of the subject-matter of the dispute and the weight to be attached to any such previous order depends upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case before him.

Where, however, there is a recent order of a Civil Court delivering possession to a particular party, that order ought to be respected and given effect to by a Magistrate acting under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code, unless and until there is something shown which might induce the Magistrate to hold that, subsequent to the delivery of possession, something had happened which had the effect of dispossessing the party to whom possession had been delivered by the Civil Court. ——— s. 145, proceedings under, object of—Breach of peace, apprehension of—Possession—Title, enquiry as to, whether relevant.

The object of the provisions contained in section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is to bring to an end by a summary process disputes relating to land, which are in their nature likely, if not suppressed, to end in breaches of the peace.

The mere circumstance that the dispute is one of a religious nature is not sufficient to justify a Magistrate to take action under section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code. There must be positive evidence on the record that a breach of the peace is likely to occur if proceedings under the section are not taken.

Section 145 of the Criminal Procedure Code is concerned solely with the fact of actual physical possession whether lawful or unlawful and questions as to title are quite irrelevant and entirely outside the scope of the section. L BHAGWAN DAS v. MAULA DAD KHAN, 25 CR. L. J. 78 80

Where a Magistrate refuses to make an inquiry under section 145(4), his proceeding cannot be held to be one under that section so as to bar the jurisdiction of the High Court to revise his order. M NILKANTH v. SURYABHAN, (1923) A. I. R. (N.) 297; 24 CR. L. J. 880 80

——— ss. 154, 157, 162, 342, 540—Local inspection by Magistrate, when permissible—Results, whether can be embodied in the testimony of witnesses.

It is competent to a Magistrate to make a local inspection for the purpose of enabling him to understand better the evidence which is laid before him and to use the evidence of his own eyes to test the truth of what the witnesses have deposed to, and it is immaterial that the result of such inspection is not at once put on record and laid open to the scrutiny of parties; nor is it necessary that the accused or their representatives should invariably be present at a local inspection.

Where, after a local inspection, the Magistrate re-calls the prosecution witnesses under section 540, Criminal Procedure Code, and really embodies the results of his inspection in the examination of such witnesses on re-call and the accused are afforded a full opportunity of cross-examining them with reference to the facts then elicited, the procedure adopted is not illegal nor prejudicial to the accused.

In giving or upholding a sanction under section 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Court is not restricted to the evidence recorded in the original suit. It has inherent power to take such steps as may be necessary to enable it to discharge the duty imposed upon it under sub-section (6) of the section.

One D, purporting to act on behalf of his father, G, applied to a Cantonment Magistrate to have two shops opened and the property found in them placed in deposit. G was the owner of these shops and it was alleged that the tenant S had disappeared and that his whereabouts were not known. The application was granted and the shop was opened by the Police under direction from the Magistrate. Subsequently, an application was made by one G D acting on behalf of his brother S objecting that false information had been given and stating that a civil suit was pending regarding the title to the shops. The Magistrate thereupon cancelled his previous order and directed that S should be put in possession. S then applied for sanction to prosecute G under section 182, Penal Code. The Cantonment Magistrate granted sanction to prosecute both G and D. They appealed to the Sessions Judge who revoked the sanction. S applied for revision:

Section 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code does not apply to an infringement of a statutory requirement. It only applies to errors, omissions, or irregularities of a formal and technical nature which may occur by accident or oversight, and does not cover a substantial departure from the mode of conducting criminal trials laid down by law.

In two cross-cases which arose out of the same occurrence and were being separately tried by a Sessions Judge, the evidence of the prosecution witnesses in each case, which included the depositions of the accused in the cross-case, was, at the request of the accused, treated as defence evidence in the cross-case:

Held, (1) that this mode of recording defence evidence was hopelessly and entirely illegal inasmuch as:—

(a) it resulted substantially in the accused in both cases being tried jointly, which was illegal;

old or have passed away, a recital in the deed of transfer, consistent with the probabilities and circumstances of the case, assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside.

The history of a village showed that in 1840 all the proprietors, including the common ancestor of the parties to the dispute, left the village and took up their residence elsewhere. For a period of 25 years the village site was deserted and the fields untilled. Thereafter, certain of the descendants of the previous proprietors, including the son of the common ancestor of the parties, returned to the village and commenced cultivation:

Held, that the land occupied by each descendant on return to the village must be treated as his self-acquisition and could not be regarded as the property of his ancestor who abandoned the village, even though the decendant actually resumed possession of the same land as was held by the ancestor.

Divorce Act (IV of 1869), s. 2—Excommunication by sect or Church, effect of—Excommunicated person whether ceases to be Christian—Profession of Christianity—Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act (XXI of 1866), s. 16—Conversion of married Hindu to Christianity—Dissolution of marriage—Procedure.

Where a person who professes the Christian religion is excommunicated by the sect or Church to which he belongs he does not thereby cease to profess Christianity within the meaning of section 2 of the Divorce Act. The question of profession of Christianity is a question of his own action and not of the action of his Church.

Under the Native Converts' Marriage Dissolution Act the conversion to Christianity of one of two spouses of a Hindu marriage does not dissolve the marriage. Under that Act, to obtain dissolution of marriage the convert must first of all apply for restitution of conjugal rights and then, after the lapse of a year, for dissolution of the marriage if conjugal rights are refused. Otherwise, the conversion to Christianity of one of two spouses has no effect on the existing marriage.

Per Oldfield, J.—The policy of the Divorce Act appears to require the application of the words of section 2 of the Act to what may be a substantial class of persons in this country, viz., those who have abandoned a particular sect, but who still remain unattached to any religion other than Christianity.

Per Ramesam, J.—The religion of a person is what that person professes and it does not require recognition by the other persons belonging to that religion. A Hindu who professes to be a Hindu, though he may be excommunicated by all the existing Hindu castes, is still a Hindu, though probably he is subject to great social inconvenience. In this respect there is nothing peculiar to Christianity. If a person says that he is a Christian though he does not belong to any of the existing Christian Churches, he is still a Christian. Probably his creed is different from the existing creeds and he is subject to social inconvenience in respect of the perform-

Plaintiffs alleging themselves to be the presumptive reversioners of one G. sued for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by the widow of G. in favour of the defendant was invalid as against them. It appeared that after the gift had been executed the defendant donee redeemed a mortgage executed by G. in favour of the plaintiffs and some other persons:

Held, that in the event of the gift being declared invalid, the Court could very properly make a declaration in this very suit to the effect that the plaintiffs surviving the widow of G. would be entitled to actual possession of their share of the property only on payment to the defendant or his legal representatives of their share of the mortgage-debt.

——— ss. 27, 114, 133—Accomplice, testimony of—Corroboration — Circumstantial evidence—Retracted confession, value of—Confession to Police—Discovery consequent upon confession—Statement, how far admissible.

The rule of law enacted in section 133 of the Evidence Act must be subjected to the test deduced from the accumulated experience of human conduct in relation to the testimony of an accomplice. The guiding rule in this behalf is furnished by Illustration (b) of section 114 of that Act which lays down "that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars."

An accomplice is too immoral a person to be worthy of credit without corroboration in material particulars and if corroboration is not forthcoming, because it is not possible in the nature of things that it should be forthcoming, it does not make the accomplice less immoral or his uncorroborated testimony less unworthy of credit.

It would be wholly unsafe to treat a piece of circumstantial evidence which is widely dissociated from the corpus delicti as a material particular to be of any corroborative value to the testimony of an accomplice.

In cases dependent on circumstantial evidence in order to justify the inference of guilt the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt.

The favourable impressions on the Judge's mind as to the demeanour of an accomplice in Court cannot take the place of corroboration in material particulars to make the testimony of the accomplice worthy of credit.

It cannot be laid down as an absolute rule of law that a confession made and subsequently retracted by an accused cannot be accepted as evidence of his guilt without independent corroborative evidence. But the credibility of a confession is in each case a matter to be decided by the Court in the light of the circumstances in which the confession was originally made and in which it was afterwards withdrawn.

So much of a confession made to the Police as directly leads to the recovery of certain articles is admissible in evidence but a further statement with regard to them, for instance, that they were stolen property, is no part of the information directly leading to their discovery and is inadmissible under section 27 of the Evidence Act. ——— s. 30—Confession of co-accused—Substantial self-implication—Admission of actual guilt, whether necessary—Confession, retracted, value of—Corroborative evidence.

All that is required to make the confession of an accused person admissible against a co-accused under section 30 of the Evidence Act is that the confession shall substantially implicate its maker in regard to the offence with which he and his co-accused are charged. It is not necessary that there should be an admission of actual guilt. The admission may establish constructive guilt only.

Execution of decree—Decree satisfied by temporary alienation of judgment-dbtor's land—Executing Court, power of, to modify terms of alienation.

A money-decree was fully satisfied by the grant of a lease for 20 years to the decree-holder of some land belonging to the judgment-debtor and the case was sent to the record-room. Some years afterwards, the Executing Court, on the application of the judgment-debtor, cancelled the remaining portion of the lease and directed that possession of the land be restored to the judgment-debtor on his paying to the decree-holder a certain sum of money which was found on calculation to be due to the decree-holder;

Held, that the Executing Court had become functus officio as soon as the decree was fully satisfied by the grant of the lease, and was not, therefore, competent subsequently to reduce the term of the lease which had been given in full satisfaction of the decree.

Family settlement, nature of—Award, whether a settlement—Award when binding a person whose interests are analogous to those of parties to arbitration—Award, by whom may be questioned.

A family settlement implies a mutual settlement by certain contending parties belonging to the same family of some disputed claims and rights. An award of arbitration is not a settlement of that character. It is a decision of a tribunal constituted by the contending parties for the settlement of their disputes, and in so far as it is a lawful and valid award, it is binding on the parties to the arbitration proceedings and their privies. Whether such an award is binding on persons whose interests are analogous to those of the parties to the arbitration proceedings, is a matter which is not capable of an inflexible answer. In each case it has to be determined whether the person who agreed to the reference to arbitration was seeking to assert a right common to himself and others and had acted fairly in representing those whose interests he had undertaken to protect.

An arbitration award can be questioned by those only who were no parties to the arbitration proceedings, but not by a person who was a party to the arbitration or to the decree passed in accordance with it, or by his representatives-in-interest. Under the provisions of section 80 A of the Government of India Act, a local Legislature may, subject to the limitations mentioned in sub-section (3) of the section, repeal or alter as to that Province any law made before or after the commencement of the Act by any authority in British India.

The limitations imposed by sub-section (3) of section 80 A of the Government of India Act relate under clause (a) to the imposition of new taxes other than those set out in Schedule I of the Scheduled Taxes Rules and under clause (h) to the Acts set out in the Schedule to the Previous Sanction Rules.

The Court-Fees Act is not set out in the Schedule to the Previous Sanction Rules, and a Court-fee not being a stamp duty within the meaning of Schedule I of the Scheduled Taxes Rules, the amendment of the Court-Fees Act by a local Legislature does not require the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council. The Bengal Court-Fees (Amendment) Act of 1922 was not, therefore, ultra vires the Bengal Legislature for want of such sanction.

The sum charged under the provisions of the Court-Fees Act upon a grant of Probate or Letters of Administration is not a tax or duty levied upon the property upon which the Probate or Administration operates but is merely a fee levied by the Court issuing the Probate or Letters of Administration for the work done in this connection, and must be paid according to the scale prescribed in the Province in which the grant is made, irrespective of the fact whether the whole of the property in respect of which the grant is made is or is not situate within that Province. But such equity is not restricted to a mere right to sue. Where a co-parcener has sued for recovery of the property alienated by another co-parcener or for partition, the alienee, as a defendant, is entitled to claim partition in that suit itself and have his alienor's share ascertained where it can be conveniently done, without driving the parties to a separate suit, so as to avoid multiplicity of litigation.

Where two out of th rteen Velies of joint family lands were improperly alienated by the managing member of a joint fami y consisting of father and son, in a suit after his death by his grandson, the only surviving co-parcener of the family, to set aside the alienation and to recover the property from the alienee :

Held, that the alienor, who was a half sharer in the family, having been entitled to property at least equal in value to the property alienated —the family property being a great deal more than double the extent sold—, the alienee was entitled to have the whole of the alienated item allotted to his alienor's share and the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree to any extent and his suit was, therefore, liable to be dismissed.

A sale by the manager of a Hindu joint family is not prima facie void but is only voidable at the instance of the other members of the family, and where a co-parcener succeeds in setting aside an alienation and getting a decree for possession, he is not entitled to mesne profits prior to the date of plaint.

——— Partition—Separate acquisition of member—"Gains of science," what are.

The acquisition of a distinct property by a member of an undivided Hindu family without the aid of joint family funds, is his self-acquired property, and is not subject to partition.

Lakshman Mavaram v. Jamnalal, 6 B. 225; 6 Ind. Jur. 369; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 608, relied on.

Under Hindu Law the ordinary gains of science are divisible when such science has been imparted at the family expense and acquired while receiving a family maintenance; but it is otherwise when the science has been imparted at the expense of persons who are not members of the acquirer's family.

By the "gains of science" is meant the special training for a particular profession which is the immediate source of the gains, and not the general elementary training which is the stepping stone to the acquisition of all science.

There is no authority in the Mitakshara for the contention that acquisitions made personally and without the aid of joint funds by a member of a joint family, who received an ordinary education suitable to his position as a member of the family to which he belonged, should in law be regarded as partible and not as his self-acquired property.

——— Presumption—Separation, proof of—Receiver necessary conditions for—Effect of re-union—Members, whether bound by act of manager—Property acquired during separation, whether becomes joint after re-union.

The natural presumption of the Hindu Law is in favour of a family being joint and the burden of proving separation lies on the party alleging it.

For a re-union two things are essential: firstly that one can re-unite with his father, brother or paternal uncle: and, secondly that the re-union must take place after separation, so that the parties seeking to re-unite must have separated before the re-union.

Basanta Kumar Singha v. Jogendra Nath Singha, 33 C. 371; 3 C. L. J. 98; 10 C. W. N. 236, followed.

To constitute a valid re-union the parties should not only live in one mess and in one place and like one family, but they should again joint each other's share of the property and remain in possession.

The effect of a re-union is to place the united co-parceners in the same position as they would have been in, had no partition taken place and the property of the united members stands on exactly the same footing as that of members who have always been undivided so that, upon the death of any one of the re-united members, his share will pass by survivorship to the remaining members and will not get into the hands of any undivided member so long as there are undivided members in existence.

All members of a joint Hindu family, whether minor or adult, are bound by the act of the manager or karta of the family unless they prove that the karta entered into transactions which were prejudicial to their interests and not for their benefit.

A property acquired during the separation by a member of the family will be presumed, after the re-union, to have been acquired out of the funds of the joint estate and the re-united members will be entitled to a share in it.

Prankishen Paul Chowdry v. Mothooramohun Paul Chowdry, 10 M. I. A. 403; 5 W. R. P. C. 11; 1 Suth. P. C J. 609; 2 Sar. P. C. J. 164; 19 E. R. 1025, followed.

The creditor of a member of a joint Hindu family must prove facts which embody the representations of the alleged needs of the family estate and the motives influencing the immediate loan. A trusteeship with power to appoint a successor is well known to and recognised by Hindu Law.

A Hindu made a Will according to which after leaving certain properties to his daughter he made provision for the performance of his sradh and dedicated certain properties to religious uses. He appointed his wife his executrix and shebait and gave her power to appoint her successor. The widow of the testator left a Will by which she appointed a great-nephew of her deceased husband, born after his death, as shebait. The heirs of the testator brought a suit for the construction of his Will:

Held, that the power given to the widow was not badly exercised and the appointment by the widow of a successor to herself was not inconsistent with Hindu Law the fact that the successor so appointed was not alive at the time of the death of the testator would not make the appointment invalid. A sum paid as interest to partners for capital put into a firm represents merely an assignment of a part of the net profits for the year in favour of partners who are regarded as entitled to such assignment by reason of special advances of capital made by them in the course of the year and is not an "allowance" admissible under section 10 (2) (iii) of the Income-Tax Act.

When a firm does not apply for registration as prescribed by statutory rules prior to the last day by which its return of income for the year is due it cannot be held to be a registered firm for the year in question by filing the application prior to the assessment.

The mere blunder of an Income-Tax Officer cannot make a firm a "registered firm" for the purposes of assessment during a certain financial year, if they are not such within the meaning of the definition. ——— s. 11, meaning and applicability of—Plaintiff who has ceased to be Indian Soldier, whether can take advantage of provision—Intention of Legislature—Interpretation of Statutes.

If the language of a Statute is clear and unambiguous the Court must give effect to it and has no right to extend its operation in order to carry out the real or supposed intention of the Legislature.

The Legislature in enacting the Indian Soldiers Litigation Act intended to provide for the special protection in respect of civil and revenue litigation of Indian Soldiers serving under War conditions and contemplated that a person's right to have recourse to a Court of Law should not be adversely affected by reason of his serving as a soldier under War conditions. It was consequently provided that the period of such service should be excluded from the period of limitation prescribed for the suit, appeal or application which he might bring before a Court of Law and it was intended that the period of limitation should not run against him during the time he was serving under War conditions.

The language of section 11 of the Indian Soldiers Litigation Act, however, embraces only those cases in which the plaintiff is an Indian Soldier at the time of the institution of the suit, and the mere fact that he was a soldier for some time during the period of limitation prescribed for the suit does not benefit him if he has ceased to be a soldier on the date of the institution of the suit. Landlord and tenant—Adverse possession—Non-payment of rent;

The mere non-payment of rent or discontinuance of payment of rent does not by itself create adverse possession. So long as the relationship of landlord and tenant exists, the tenant cannot acquire an adverse title as against his landlord.

Bykant Nath Shaha v. Rajendra Narain Rai, 12 C. 333: 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 227, Ram Narain Singh v. Mina Koery, 25 C. 45; 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 32 and Prosonna Kumar Mukherjee v. Srikant Raut, 16 Ind. Cas. 365; 40 C. 173; 16 C. L. J. 202; 17 C. W. N. 137, relied on.

One who enters as tenant is not, merely because of that fact, precluded from subsequently holding adversely to his landlord. But to enable him to do so, it is necessary for him to renounce the idea of holding as tenant and to set up and assert an exclusive right in himself. It is further essential that the landlord should have actual notice of the tenant's claim, or that the tenant's acts of ownership should be of such an open, notorious and hostile character that the landlord must have known of it. Such conduct on the part of the tenant necessarily furnishes the landlord with the legal right to enter and re-possess himself of the premises. Hence an adverse possession by the tenant cannot be predicated from the mere fact of non-payment of rent or discontinuance of payment of rent, unless in connection therewith the landlord has been apprised that the tenant claims title in himself. When the tenant thus disclaims the title of the landlord, claims title in himself, and the landlord has notice of that fact, it has the effect of an ouster and disseisin, even though this has happened during the continuance of the term of the tenancy. The theory on which adverse possession becomes a perfect title is that the true owner has, by his own fault, failed to assert his right against the hostile holder. Consequently, where possession is originally taken and held under the true owner, a clear, positive, and continued disclaimer and disavowal of title, and an assertion of an adverse right brought home to the true owner, are indispensable before any foundation can be laid for the operation of the Statute of Limitations.

A possession commencing under the authority of or in subordination to the true title does not become transformed into a hostile one by a mere change in mental attitude. It must be shown that the true owner had knowledge of the adverse holding, or it must be so open and notorious as to raise a presumption of notice to him. ——— Tenant at fixed rent—Permanent tenancy—Excavations by tenant—Suit for damages by landlord—Injunction.

There is nothing in the law which prevents tenants having permanent heritable rights at a fixed rent from using the land of the tenancy in any manner they think fit so long as there is no risk to the right of the landlord to recove the rent payable and, unless there are any reservations, the landlord has no right in the case of such tenures other than the right to receive the stipulated rent.

A tenant holding permanently at a fixed rent made excavations on the lands of the tenancy for the purpose of making bricks. The landlord brought a suit for damages and injunction:

Held, that, in the absence of evidence that the excavations were such as would be detrimental to the right of the landlord to recover the rent payable, the landlord's claim with respect to damages or injunction was not sustainable.

Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 13—Pleader instigating people not to pay taxes and avoid Courts—Misconduct—Disciplinary jurisdiction, exercise of.

A legal practitioner who instigates people not to pay taxes to the Government and to eschew the established Courts of the land is not, so long as he continues to profess and preach those views, a fit person to be entrusted with a part of the administration of justice in the Courts and his conduct is such as calls upon the High Court in the exercise of its disciplinary powers to take action against him under section 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act.

Per Coutts Trotter, J.—The last thing the Courts should consider themselves concerned with in the ordinary way is what the political opinions of anybody are, whether they are members of the legal or any other profession. But while the Courts will always uphold the liberty of the subject in thought or speech, a Pleader who comes to ask for the issue or renewal of a sanad, is applying to be treated as a part of the machinery for the maintenance of law and order in the body politic and to take an active part in administering for the other objects of the Crown the benefits that may be supposed to result from the upkeep of law and order. It is intolerable and illogical that a man should seek to be put in that position while at the same time he is saying that law and order should be disobeyed, that taxes are not to be paid and that public offices are to be abandoned in order to paralyse the very life of the body politic. Misjoinder of causes of action in petition—Time spent in prosecuting petition, whether deducted.

An incorrectness or superfluity as to the reliefs asked for in an application for execution of a decree does not vitiate the application to such an extent as to debar the decree-holder from claiming it to be a step in-aid of execution.

An application for execution of a mortgage-decree was filed on the 20th February 1919 but that the relief asked for was not in accordance with the decree. An appeal to the High Court against that order was dismissed on the 2nd July 1920. A second application for execution was filed on the 11th May 1922. The mortgagor again objected by a petition dated the 16th June 1922, and the application was dismissed on the 13th July. On appeal by the decree-holder to the High Court;

Held, (1) that the application of the 20th February 1919 did not offend against the provisions of O. XXI, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code and was a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act;

(2) that the basis of the decision of the Subordinate Judge and of the High Court in appeal was that it was not right for the Execution Court to entertain an application in which the legitimate prayer for the execution of the decree was joined with a prayer which the Court thought it was not competent to grant and which related to relief given by another decree;

(3) that, consequently, the defect was one in the nature of a misjoinder of causes of action and was covered by section 14 of the Limitation Act;

A Court has jurisdiction to add or substitute parties suo motu untrammelled by the provisions of the Limitation Act, but it is not entitled, when making amendments, to effect the substitution or addition of parties to disregard the provisions of that Act.

A firm as such is neither a person nor an entity and, therefore, cannot be a member of a partnership. The term "firm" is merely a collective name for the individuals who are members of the partnership.

In considering the terms of an Act of the Legislature the version of the Act contained in the Acts printed and published by order of the Government, and not the version set out in the Gazette is the accurate and true version of the Act which the Legislature enacted.

——— Arts. 29, 96, 120—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 142—Suit for compensation for seizure of crops under decree ultimately set aside—Limitation—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of.

A distraint effected under the Agra Tenancy Act is a seizure of moveable property under legal process.

M. brought a suit against R. for arrears of rent under the Agra Tenancy Act claiming that the latter was his tenant in respect of certain land. The Trial Court dismissed the suit but it was decreed by the first Appellate Court. R. preferred a second appeal which was decided in his favour, but in the meanwhile M. had levied rent from R. by means of the process of distraint provided by the Tenancy Act. Semetime afterwards, R. brought a suit against M. claiming the amount of the payment levied from him by the latter together with interest:

Held, (1) that assuming the suit to be cognizable by a Civil Court, it was governed by Art 29 of the Limitation Act and not by Art. 96 or Art. 120 of the Act;

(2) that the seizure of the crops by M. was under a legal process and was wrongful even though M. had at the time a decree of a Court in favour of his title;

(3) that the proper course for R. was to have proceeded under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(4) Obiter—that the suit was not cognizable by a Civil Court as it was in substance a suit for compensation for wrongful restraint for which provision was made in section 142 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Article 120 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act should never be invoked if there is any other Article in the Schedule which upon reasonable interpretation of its language covers the particular suit with which the Court is dealing. A MAN SINGH v. RAM NATH 922

Default having been made in payment of the instalments, the mortgagee sued to recover the amount of the instalments and interest:

Held, (1) that the suit was governed by Art. 132 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act and that limitation in respect of each instalment began to run from the date of default in respect of that instalment;

(2) that the mere forbearance of the mortgagee to sue for the recovery of the amount of the instalments in respect of which default had been made did not amount to waiver and did not stop limitation from running.

Time for the doing of any thing under a decree runs from the date of the ultimate decree which terminates the litigation and becomes, as soon as it is passed, the only operative decree between the parties.

When time is fixed by the lower Court for payment of money, and the decree of that Court is confirmed on appeal, the time for payment runs from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court though the latter decree does not expressly provide that the time for payment should be calculated from the date of the appellate decree.

In a suit by the senior anantravan of the tarwad to set aside the demise as not binding on the tarwad;

Held, that the kanom having been executed in settlement of a bona fide dispute between the parties and for the benefit of the estate so as to avoid litigation was valid and binding on the members of the tarwad and it was immaterial that the sum received by the karnavan was spent for the benefit of the estate or misappropriated by him for his own purposes, provided there was no collusion between him and the defendant.

Ramsumran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari, 69 Ind. Cas. 71; 49 I. A. 344; 31 M. L. T. 200; 3 P. L. T. 749; (1922) A. I. R. (P. C.) 356; 1 Pat. 741; 16 L. W. 956; 21 A. L. J. 18; 9 O. & A. L. R. (P. C.) 175; 27 C. W. N. 269; 37 C. L. J. 356; 44 M. L. J. 751; 25 Bom. L. R. 631 (P. C.), followed.

If a person compromising with a karnavan is satisfied that the compromise is a bona fide one and that, in the ordinary course, a benefit will accrue to the estate, it is not necessary for him to prove that it actually did so as against the allegation that the benefit which should have accured was fraudulently misappropriated by the karnavan unless the person compromising is a party to the fraud and acts in collusion with the karnavan.

A renewal of a kanom by the karnavan of a Malabar tarwad before the expiry of its period when such renewal is to take effect from the date of its expiry is not valid unless it is shown to be for necessity, for it is impossible to predicate some years in advance what the state of affairs will be when the original kanom expires and what incidents should be imposed, in order to make the demise beneficial. Where, however, the karnavan obtains the consent of the kanomdar to a premature renewal to take effect at once, it does not necessarily follow that it is an act of bad management even if necessity be not proved, for the karnavan has full powers of management and is in a position to decide whether the transaction is a prudent one or not.

The position of the karnavan of a tarwad is higher than that of a Hindu widow and he has in some respects greater powers than a manager of a joint Hindu family. He has full power of management of the family property and is entitled to make alienations by way of kanoms of the tarwad property without necessity.

———, liability of—Debt incurred by father during minority of son—Hypothecation by minor on attaining majority of his own property for father's debt—Want of consideration—Necessity

Where there is no previous contract by a minor at all but only by his father, the liability of the father can be no consideration for a fresh contract by the minor on attaining majority whereby he hypothecates his property to secure payment of a debt arising out of the said liability. Should it be proved that the liability was incurred for necessaries or benefit of the minor, or that at the time the hypothecation bond was entered into there was a genuine claim against the minor and a suit against him was threatened, then an adjustment of accounts whereby the creditor accepted a certain sum and his undertaking not to sue the minor for the sum due, might be a good consideration for the bond.

A liability under a contract which is void on the ground that one of the contracting parties is a minor is no consideration for a fresh contract made by the minor on attaining majority.

Plaintiffs conveyed two Survey Nos. 76 and 394 to the defendants for Rs. 1,200 by a deed of sale. At the same time another deed was passed between the parties whereby the plaintiffs undertook to pay to the defendants Rs. 125 per annum for a period of ten years and on such re-payment the defendants undertook to re-sell the property to the plaintiffs. Subsequently, the parties arrived at an arrangement which was embodied in an unregistered document and by which the plaintiffs gave Survey No. 76 to the defendants as sold for the mortgage amount and retained the other Survey No. free from the mortgage-debt. Defendants took possession of Survey No. 76 accordingly. Later on plaintiffs sued to have an account taken of the mortgage:

Held, that, inasmuch as the agreement arrived at between the parties with regard to the apportionment of the two Survey Nos. had been acted upon for some eleven years prior to the suit it was, according to the equitable principle of part performance, binding and the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed.

The rule that a prior mortgagee who abstains from setting up his prior mortgage in a suit by a puisne mortgagee cannot afterwards set up that mortgage against the puisne mortgagee or against the auction-purchaser under a decree obtained on the puisne mortgage, has no application to a case where the prior mortgagee seeks to enforce his mortgage against the mortgagor or his representative.

Appellant, who held a mortgage on certain property obtained a decree for sale on foot of his mortgage. Subsequently, he obtained a simple money-decree against the mortgagor and brought the mortgaged property to sale in execution subject to his mortgage-decree, which was duly notified. The property was purchased by the respondent. Meanwhile, a puisne mortgagee had brought a suit for sale on his mortgage to which appellant was made a party. In that suit appellant failed to set up his prior mortgage on the basis of which he held a decree for sale. He now sought to execute that decree against the respondent:

Held, that there was nothing to prevent the appellant from executing his decree against the respondent who was in the same position as the mortgagor and who was not only aware of the mortgage decree on the date on which he purchased the property, but had purchased the property subject to the mortgage-decree which appellant was now seeking to execute. When a mortgage-deed contains no express stipulation for the payment of interest after the due date, the correct rule is that the law raises no presumption either in favour of or against an implied intention to pay interest after the due date. The determination of the question rests entirely upon the interpretation of the instrument and no definite rule of construction can be laid down except that the deed must be viewed as a whole, and the Court should avoid an interpretation which would ascribe to the parties an intention that, however payment may be delayed beyond the fixed day, the debt shall carry no interest and that the creditor shall have no remedy provided by the contract, but shall be driven to treat the contract as broken and to seek for damages. It is more reasonable to ascribe to the parties the intention of making a perfect contract.

Where, however, there is no stipulation, and no implied intention to pay post diem interest, the mortgagee is entitled to damages on account of the failure of the debtor to pay the debt at the stipulated time. The measure of damages would prima facie be the same as the rate of interest stipulated for by the parties, but the Court has discretion to reduce the rate if it is found to be unusual.

A stipulation to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 1-8 per mensem both on the mortgage-money and on the cost of improvements is an unusual one, within the meaning of the above rule.

A preliminary decree in a redemption suit directed redemption on payment of a certain sum. The plaintiff appealed seeking to reduce the sum on payment of which redemption was allowed by the Trial Court and paid ad valorem Court-fees on the amount by which he sought the decretal amount to be reduced. He paid the decretal amount into Court and a final decree in the suit was made, against which a similar appeal was preferred by the mortgagor but the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal was only Rs. two. On objection being taken by the respondent as to the amount of the Court-fees paid on the latter appeal:

Held, that the final decree was a mere corollary to the preliminary decree and followed it as a matter of course and that the appeal from that decree was really of a formal nature, which did not contest anything beyond what was contended in the appeal from the preliminary decree, and ad valorem Court-fees having been paid on the latter appeal, the appellant could not be required to pay a similar fee on the appeal from the final decree. ——— Marriage — Impotent person, definition of—Suit for cancellation of marriage—Wife, what must establish—Procedure—Expert evidence, value of—Finding based on opinion of experts, whether conclusive—Second appeal.

According to Muhammadan Law, a person is said to be 'impotent' if he is unable to have connection with a woman, though he has the natural organ; or if he is able to have connection with an enjoyed woman, but not with a virgin, or with some women but not with others. Whether the disability be by reason of disease, or weakness, or original constitution, or advanced age or enchantment, he is still to be accounted impotent with respect to her with whom he cannot have connection.

The right of a wife to claim a judicial divorce on the ground of her husband's impotency is contingent on her succeeding to establish that she did not know of his impotency at the time of her marriage, and that it has not since then been removed; but the divorce must remain suspended for a year after the decree in order that it might be ascertained whether the defect is removable.

Muhammadan Law—contd.

A. v. B., 21 B. 7 ; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 54, relied upon.

A finding based on the opinion of experts is not necessarily a finding based on facts proved or directly demonstrated and may be interfered with in second appeal.

The opinions of experts are relevant but not conclusive as to matters to which they relate and where they materially differ, their value and sufficiency may legitimately form the subject of consideration and scrutiny despite the acceptance of any one of them by one Court or another.

Plaintiff sued for the annulment of her marriage with the defendant alleging that he was impotent and that she came to know of this fact after her marriage. It appeared that she had lived with him for about six years but that her hymen was intact and there were also other signs of virginity. On the other hand, the medical evidence showed that the defendant was potent and quite fit for sexual intercourse :

Held, (1) that as the hymen was intact and there was nothing to show that the physical conditions of the hymen were of an abnormal character, very strong evidence was needed to rebut the presumption which arose from that state of things against the consummation of the marriage by the husband in spite of the wife having lived with him for about six years ;

(2) that a prima facie case having been made out the plaintiff was entitled to a decree nisi for the annulment of her marriage with the defendant, but that the decree would not be made absolute till a year hence during which period the plaintiff would allow full access to the defendant to exercise his material rights ;

(3) that if after the expiry of the above period she satisfied the Court that her husband continued to be impotent, the decree would be confirmed.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 9 —Holder in due course, who is—Pro-note payable on demand, negotiation of.

To constitute a person a holder in due course three things are necessary, (1) that the holder of the promissory-note must be a holder for consideration, (2) that it must have been transferred to him before the amount mentioned in it became payable, and (3) that the transferee must be a transferee in good faith, and that he should not have any reason to believe that there was any defect in the title of the transferor.

Where a promissory-note payable on demand is negotiated, it is not deemed to be overdue for the purpose of affecting the holder with defects of title, of which he had no notice, by reason that it appears that a reasonable time for presenting it for payment has elapsed since its issue.

Oudh Estates Act (I of 1869), ss. 8, 13, 22, 23, scope of—Interpretation—"A person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act," meaning of—Will, inoperative—Consent of parties, effect of.

Section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act, 1869, was devised to impose restrictions on sudden freaks of impulse. It insisted upon certain formalities in the case of gifts and devises and fixed certain time limits for the performance thereof in order that the strongest proof might be available of a disposing mind of deliberate intention in case the donee or legatee happened to be a person who was not the legal heir to the estate under the special rules of succession or the ordinary law applicable to such estates or one of his younger sons.

The expression "a person who would have succeeded according to the provisions of the Act" in section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act, is confined to the persons or one of the persons to whom the estate would have descended according to the provisions of the special clause of section 22 of that Act applicable to the particular case.

The proper intrepretation of sub-section (1) of section 13 appears to be that the privilege is confined to the one person who would succeed to the taluadar's estate under the Act; and that the words "under the ordinary law to which persons of the donor or testator's tribe and religion are subject" govern cases falling under section 22, clause 11, and section 23 of the Act. If there is a person existing, who would succeed under the special provisions of section 22 (first ten clauses) that person alone would be the privileged person.

A Will which fails to satisfy the conditions imposed by section 13 of the Oudh Estates Act is inoperative, and, being thus void and unenforceable, the mere consent of parties would not validate it. It may create a new title to take the place of that which was inchoate, defective or imperfect.

The use of the word "ordinarily" in List No. 2 prepared under section 8 of the Oudh Estates Act implies that an occasional variation by consent or otherwise would not affect the custom of devolution.

as President of the Muslim League. The accused in his speech had pleaded for a change in the wording of the aims and objects of the Muslim League which were "The attainment of Swaraj by the people of India by all peaceful and legitimate means" and for substituting the words "possible and proper" for the words peaceful and legitimate. He had also advocated the immediate setting up of a parallel Government on the lines of a Republic of the United States of India, independent of all British control and the establishment of National Courts, Schools and Army. He had further remarked that in case of a declaration of Martial Law by the Established Authority, a necessary consequence of the declaration of independence, the people of India and the Muhammadans at any rate, would carry on a guerilla warfare because none could remain non-violant after the resort to machine guns and the gallows by the British Government. On the charge under section 124-A, the Trying Judge disagreed with the assessors and convicted and sentenced the accused. There was no appeal from this conviction. As regards the other offence which was tried with the assessors as jurors, he disagreed with the verdict of 'not guilty' and referred the case to the High Court under section 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code:

Held, (1) that if the worst construction were put upon the speech it amounted to a prophecy or even a threat that violence may be necessary in future but it did not constitute a direct and clear incitement to violence and, therefore, the accused was not guilty of an offence under section 121, Penal Code;

——— ss. 411, 414—Receiving stolen property—No evidence about property being stolen—Conviction, whether justifiable—Offence under s. 411, prosecution, duty of.

Although there may be cases in which it may not be necessary in a case under sections 411 or 414, Penal Code, to prove that the property was stolen from a particular individual. Yet, as a rule a person cannot be called upon to account for the possession of property where there is no evidence whatever that the property has been stolen.

A mere suspicion against the accused that the property was not his own would not justify a conviction under section 411 in the absence of direct or circumstantial evidence, establishing beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was stolen.

In order to justify a conviction under section 411, Penal Code, it is the duty of the prosecution to establish that the accused dishonestly retained the property and had knowledge at the time of the receipt that the property was obtained in one of the ways specified in section 410 of the Indian Penal Code. ——— s. 441—Criminal trespass, what constitutes—Offence, relating to public property—Court, duty of—Thandika property, whether public property.

A person who has a right of entry into a building cannot be held to be a trespasser by reason of his failure to obtain the consent or permission of the party in occupation, or by reason of anything which he does in such building, unless it is shown that the thing so done was an offence, or was otherwise of such a nature as to bring the entire proceedings within the definition of criminal trespass in section 441 of the Penal Code.

Thandika property is public property and any investigation of the question of title may be one of considerable complexity. Consequently, cases involving criminal offences in relation to such property, ought not to be tried summarily. Before issuing a process in such a case, the complaint and complainant should be closely examined in order to ascertain whether it is a proper case for a Criminal Court, and still more so before convicting an accused. ——— s. 447, offence under—Intention—Question of inference—Court, duty of—Summary trial—Clear finding, necessity of.

The essence of an offence under section 447, Penal Code, lies in the intent of the accused to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult, or annoy any person in possession of the property with reference to which the trespass is made.

A man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his acts, and if any annoyance must inevitably attend his acts and he does those acts without any reasonable justification, he must be held to intend to annoy, even though he had no desire to do so and his only desire is to obtain some advantage for himself.

The question whether a man should be presumed to have intended the natural consequences of his acts when the intention impelling the commission of the act is stated to be one by the prosecution and another by the accused, is a question of inference to be drawn from all the circumstances of the case and to do that is the primary duty of the Trial Court.

In summary trials it is all the more important that there should be clear findings on questions of fact because it is only through such findings that the Court of Revision can form its own judgment with regard to the legality or otherwise of the proceedings of the Trial Court. The defendant in her written statement alleged that there had been a divorce by mutual agreement. The plaintiff succeeded in the first Court. In appeal, the defendant urged for the first time that the plaintiff had no cause of action since he did not allege a divorce, nor did he pray for one. The plaintiff then made an oral application for amendment of plaint which was refused. On second appeal:

Held, that having regard to the fact that the omission from the plaint of a prayer for divorce was in all probability due to the fact that the plaintiff and his legal adviser considered that the marriage was already dissolved, which view, though erroneous, was under the circumstances at least excusable, and also having regard to the fact that the objection to the form of the suit was taken for the first time in appeal, the case was pre-eminently one in which an amendment of the plaint should have been allowed in order that justice might be done.

Plaintiffs sued for possession of certain land on the allegation that a sale of the land in favour of the defendants by the widow of a deceased reversioner of the plaintiffs was without consideration and necessity. The Court found that a mortgage executed by the widow in favour of the defendants in respect of a portion of the land was binding on the property and gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession on payment of the amount of the mortgage:

Where on the date of suit a plaintiff has no title to the property in suit but before the case is disposed of by the First Court, he becomes entitled to the property and an amendment of the plaint can then be allowed setting forth the claim as arising on such accrual of title, the Court acts rightly in disposing of the suit on the footing of the plaintiff's title acquired during the pendency of the suit. One co-owner may sue to eject a trespasser without the other co-owners being made parties to the suit, provided the title of the latter is not denied.

It does not relate to some other insolvency pending in some other Court of another Province or in any of the District Courts of the Presidency.

A District Court is not subject to the superintendence of the Commissioner in Insolvency but to that of the High Court on its appellate side.

Plaintiff placed orders with the first defendant who were acting as agents of the second defendant, an English Company in London, for the purchase of certain yellow metal. The goods arrived and were in the custody of the National Bank of India whose draft for £462 the plaintiff was instructed to accept and take delivery of goods. This amount was later, by consent of parties, reduced to £400. But soon after, a different arrangement was substituted by which the plaintiff, apparently on account of the prevailing rate of exchange, sent £400 direct to the second defendant in London and the latter instructed the first defendant to pay the National Bank "out of the funds of ours in your hands" and release the goods from the Bank. But the first defendant refused to pay up the Bank till some disputes about some other matter between plaintiff and first defendant were settled. The second defendant meanwhile went into voluntary liquidation. In an action by plaintiff for £400 against first and second defendants:

Held, (1) that the second defendant was liable as for moneys had and received to plaintiff's use on a consideration which had failed and plaintiff was entitled to an equitable charge for the amount of the funds of the second defendant in the hands of the first defendant;

(2) that the plaintiff's equitable charge over the funds in the hands of the first defendant must prevail over any legal claim either of the liquidators of second defendant or of the Bank and first defendant was bound to pay the amount to the plaintiff notwithstanding any pressure or prohibition from the liquidator.

A defendant was originally impleaded as a minor and an application made for appointment of his mother as guardian. The defendant, however, appeared and stated he was of age. The Trial Court went into the question and found he was of age. He was actually represented by a Vakil and contested the suit. No application for amendment of the plaint was, however, made nor was any amendment ordered by the Court, and his name continued in the plaint as a minor under the guardianship of his mother. On appeal to the lower Appellate Court he was represented as major and was again represented by a Vakil. The lower Appellate Court finding other issues in favour of the plaintiff-appellant dismissed the suit on the technical ground that the defendant-respondent had been treated in the Court of first instance as a minor, whereas in fact he was of age. In second appeal to the High Court:

Held, that as the defendant had full knowledge of the proceedings in Court, having actually appeared and been represented by Vakils in both the Courts, the suit could not be dismissed merely on the technical ground urged, and that assuming there was any irregularity it was fully cured by the conduct of both the parties.

——— Two cases decided simultaneously—Two appeals—One appeal dismissed as time-barred—Decision, whether res judicata qua other appeal—Refusal of Appellate Court to entertain other appeal—Miscarriage of justice—Irregularity—Revision.

The right of a party to appeal in one out of two cases simultaneously decided must be recognised especially where it does not involve the setting aside of any decree held by the opposite party which has become final by reason of non-appeal.

A porprietor left a Will bequeathing the whole of his property to his two daughters. On the strength of this Will the daughters alienated some land to one person and a house to another. The brother of the deceased proprietor brought two suits for possession alleging that the testator had no power to make a Will and that no title was conferred by it on the alienors. The issue in both the suits was the same. They were heard and decided together by a single judgment which was recorded in the case relating to the land. In the case relating to the house a formal order referring to this judgment was made. The alienors appealed against the decree given in the suit relating to the land. The appeal against the decree given in the suit relating to the house was filed out of time. The Divisional Judge dismissed this latter appeal as time-barred and then held with regard to the appeal regarding the land suit that no appeal could lie because by reason of the dismissal of the other appeal, the only issue had been finally decided and constituted res judicata, and dismissed this appeal also. The alienors preferred an application for revision:

Held, (1) that the refusal of the Divisional Judge to entertain the appeal on the ground that his jurisdiction to hear it had been ousted by reason of the operation of the law of res judicata was wrong and amounted to a miscarriage of justice;

(2) that the miscarriage amounted to an irregularity within the meaning of the law governing revisions;

(3) that the fact that no application for revision had been lodged against the dismissal as time-barred, of the appeal respecting the house, did not debar the Court from entertaining this revision;

(4) that the defendants had the right to appeal to the Divisional Court and to obtain an adjudication in the land suit without necessarily appealing in the case of the house suit;

Under sections 24 (3) and 39 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, a creditor is not bound to tender proof of his debt before the discharge of the insolvent or before the declaration of the final dividend, but is entitled to tender proof of his debts at any time during the administration so long as there are assets to be distributed and no injustice is done to third parties. Ex parte Boddam, In re Taylor, (1860) 45 E. Provincial Insolvency Act—1920—concld.

——— s. 53—Fraudulent transfer, setting aside of—Creditor, whether can take action—Limitation.

The language of section 53 of the Provincial Insolvency Act makes it incumbent on the Court to annul every transfer of property made by an insolvent if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years from the date of the transfer provided it comes to a finding that such transfer was not made in good faith and for valuable consideration. The section contemplates that action under it will be taken by the Receiver but it does not mean that even where the Receiver refuses or neglects to act no one else can set the proceedings under this section in motion. Whether the Court chooses to take action itself under the section or is moved by the Receiver or by a creditor it is not bound by any period of limitation and Art. 181 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act has no application to such a proceeding.

——— s. 54—Fraudulent preference, what amounts to.

In order to hold that a transfer by a debtor in favour of a creditor constitutes a fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, the Court must be satisfied that the dominant or substantial motive of the debtor in making the transfer was to prefer the particular creditor and not to secure some advantage for himself.

A debtor approached one of his creditors for a fresh loan which he required for business purposes. The creditor refused to advance the loan unless his previous debt was also secured. The debtor then agreed to grant him a mortgage of certain property to secure the previous debt and the fresh advance:

Held, that the mortgage did not constitute a fraudulent preference within the meaning of section 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. L DAULAT RAM v. DEOKI NANDAN 861

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 56 (4), 131—Well, private, used by public—Dedication to public—Presumption—Well whether vests in Municipal Committee—Well in dangerous condition—Procedure.

In India, ordinarily, the owners of wells do not prohibit the public from using them. It is considered to be a meritorious act to allow the public to take water even from private wells. So the mere fact that the public have been allowed to take water from a private well for a number of years cannot necessarily lead to the conclusion that the well was dedicated to the public.

A private well does not vest in the Municipal Committee merely because of long user by the public and section 56 (b) of the Punjab Municipal Act has no application to such a well.

If a private well appears to a Municipal Committee to be injurious to health or offensive to the neighbourhood, it has ample power under section 131 of the Punjab Municipal Act by notice to require the owner to cleanse, repair, cover, fill up or drain it off. The onus of proving that the consideration for a pre-emptible sale entered in the sale-deed was fixed and paid in good faith, rests solely upon the vendee and it rests upon him from the very outset and not by reason of the burden having shifted by evidence, slight or otherwise, produced by the pre-emptor.

Gulab v Ram Singh, 102 P. R. 1890, followed.

The word "payment" means more than a public transfer of cash from hand to hand. A genuine payment implies that this transfer is permanent and real and that the vendor is really parting with and the vendee really acquiring something of value.

A reference to record sales is a very unsatisfactory method of determining market-value and the results of such a calculation should be regarded with the utmost caution

A calculation based on an actually existing lease is certainly one of the best methods which can be adopted for calculating the market-value of the leased property.

The price proved actually to have been paid is the best test of market-value. Pesh AHMADJI KHAN v. GULMIR 271

Two suits were instituted against the same defendants for recovery of arrears of rent for different holdings at different rentals. The suits were heard together; the issues framed were common to both suits, and they were disposed of by one judgment, in which the Trial Court found that the defendants had only one holding, and not two holdings, and that the lands covered by the two suits formed one holding at one consolidated rent, for which a decree was passed in favour of the plaintiff in one suit only conditional on his paying additional Court-fees. Plaintiff paid the deficit Court fees and agreed to take a decree for the amount the rentals for the lands covered by both suits' a final decree was accordingly drawn up for this amount the decree in the other suit was one of dismissal of suit. The plaintiff preferred an appeal against the latter decree, but preferred no appeal against the former decree: the Appel ate Court reversed the decree dismissing the suit, and decreed that suit also. The defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the decree in the first suit having become final operated as res judicata and it was not open to the plaintiffs to raise the same question again in appeal in the other suit;

(2) that the plaintiff having accepted the decree of the Munsif and having agreed to take a decree for an amount as representing the consolidated rent for the lands covered by both the suits it was no longer oden to him to challenge the correctness of the decree.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 14, 15, 16—Agreement to sell—Vendor unable to convey good title to whole property—Purchaser, whether can enforce specific performance of remainder—Abatement.

Specific Relief Act—contd.

It is of the essence of specific performance that part only of an agreement should not be performed. The exceptions to this general rule are contained in sections 14, 15 and 16 of the Specific Relief Act.

Under section 14 of the Specific Relief Act, specific performance of a contract may be enforced by either the promisor or promisee, provided the part which cannot be performed is inconsiderable and may be compensated for in money and provided that such compensation is made.

Under section 15 of the Specific Relief Act, the party in default may claim specific performance without compensation, where the part left unperformed is small in value and admits of compensation, but he cannot have specific performance where such part is considerable and does not admit of compensation.

Under section 16 of the Act where a contract consists of several parts, which are separate from, and independent of, one another, and some of which cannot and ought not to be performed, such part or parts, as can and ought to be performed, may alone be specifically enforced, with a proportionate abatement in the price. This is on the principle that such a contract though nominally one, is actually divisible and where the Court enforces what is apparently a part of the contract, it really enforces an entire and complete contract.

The question whether a contract is divisible or indivisible is one of construction, depending upon the nature and circumstances of each individual contract.

Though the difference between the property contracted to be sold and that which the vendor can actually convey may be great, the Court will generally, notwithstanding this circumstance, enforce the contract where the vendee is willing to take whatever interest the vendor has.

Jones v. Evans, (1848) 17 L. J. Ch. 469; 12 Jur. 664; 80 R. R. 192, Barnes v. Wood, (1869) 8 Eq 424; 38 L. J. Ch. 683; 17 W. R. 1080, Hooper v. Smart, [Bailey v. Piper], (1874) 18 Eq. 683; 43 L. J. Ch. 704; 31 L. T. 86; 22 W. R. 943, relied on.

But if the vendee is, from the first, aware of the defendant's incapacity to convey the whole of what he has contracted for, he cannot generally insist on having at an abated price what the vendor can convey.

Even in cases where the ascertainment of the amount of abatement cannot be certain or exact the Court proceeds to grant abatement, if it can reasonably estimate the amount of abatement from the evidence of competent persons.

Defendant agreed to sell two distinct and independent plots of land, neither of which was important for the enjoyment of the other, to plaintiff, and failed to disclose to the latter that one of the plots was owned by his wife. In a suit for specific performance.

Held, (1) that the contract was divisible and the case fell within the purview of section 16 of the Specific Relief Act;

By reason of the undervaluation of a suit, plaintiff filed an appeal against the decree of the Trial Court to the District Judge, whereas, on the correct valuation, the appeal lay to the High Court. Defendant did not object to the valuation either in the Trial Court or before the District Judge. On a second appeal being preferred to the High Court by the defendant, the undervaluation was discovered by the Stamp Reporter and both parties accepted the correct valuation pointed out by that officer. Defendant thereupon objected that plaintiffs' appeal to the District Judge was incompetent and the latter's decree was, therefore, null and void for want of jurisdiction:

Held, that, in the absence of any objection by the defendant to the undervaluation in the Trial Court or the lower Appellate Court and of anything to show that the undervaluation had prejudicially affected the disposal of the appeal on the merits, the defendant's objection could not be entertained in second appeal in view of the provisions of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act.

Though the Transfer of Property Act does not extend to the Punjab, the fundamental principles laid down therein have generally been adopted by the Courts of the Province as affording proper rules of decision.

The rule of caveat emptor has become obsolete by reason of the provision contained in section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, and where the consideration for a sale fails, the vendor is bound to return the purchase-money to the purchaser, even where there is no covenant in the deed of sale guaranteeing his title. There is always an implied covenant of title under section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act.

The provisions contained in the Transfer of Property Act are not applicable to the Punjab and there is no positive enactment in force in that Province which prohibits the insertion of a clause in a mortgage-deed conferring a power of sale on the mortgagee without the intervention of the Court.

Therefore, there is nothing to prevent a limited Company in the Punjab issuing debentures and securing them by a mortgage in favour of trustees with the power of sale.

A person in a fiduciary position cannot sell to himself property which he holds in his fiduciary character, the principle being that the interest of the seller to get the highest price and that of the buyer to offer the lowest price should not be centred in the same person.

This principle, however, is inapplicable to the case of a sale of the property of a limited Company effected by the trustees for the debenture-holders of the Company, under a power of sale conferred upon them, where the property is purchased by one of the debenture-holders, inasmuch as the sale being on behalf of the Company it is the duty and interest of the trustees to secure as high a price as possible and there is no conflict of interests. The shield of a subsequent mortgagee, who acquires the rights of a prior mortgagee, is essentially different in character from the shield of a mortgagee who acquires the rights of the mortgagor. The former can protect himself so long as the rights under the earlier mortgage subsist. In the case of the latter, his rights as a mortgagee merge in those of a mortgagor or remain in suspense, as it were, till they are needed for purposes of defence. So long as he retains the rights of the mortgagor, he is not affected by any question of limitation, for he cannot be required to sue for the recovery of the money due on his mortgage from his own property.

Per Krishnan, J.—If a person buys property over which he has a mortgage himself and the mortgage in consequence becomes discharged by merger or by the terms of the sale, he can nevertheless use that mortgage as a shield against any puisne incumbrancer who attempts to enforce his claim against the property, unless his intention to extinguish the mortgage is clear otherwise. That is the principle of section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act. The buyer cannot be credited with the intention of altogether extinguishing his mortgage for all purposes when it is found to be to his benefit to keep it alive, merely because in the deed of purchase a part of the purchase-money is treated as going in discharge of his mortgage. Whether the purchase is statedly of the whole property for a price made up of the price of the equity of redemption and of the mortgage amount or whether it is, statedly, of the equity of redemption only, the transaction is substantially the same; and as it is for his benefit to keep the first mortgage alive, one cannot necessarily assume the existence of an intention on his part to extinguish it, even in the former case. But where he expressly covenants to pay the mortgage amount of the puisne incumbrancer, the position becomes different, and he cannot afterwards deny his liability.

Transfer of Property Act—concld.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—An undertaking by a prior incumbrancer, who purchases the mortgaged property, to pay off a puisne incumbrancer, is inconsistent with an intention to keep alive his own mortgage in the sense that it is to prevail over the mortgage of the puisne incumbrancer.

A mortgage which is dead in fact cannot be used as a shield against a subsequent incumbrance. Section 101 of the Transfer of Property Act only enacts that a mortgage which in fact exists must not in law be deemed to be extinguished by reason of the merger in the same individual of the two interests, the interest of the mortgagee and the interest of the owner of the equity of redemption. But a mortgage which has become extinguished cannot, on principle, be held to spring into existence to be enforced against the puisne incumbrancer. Defendant told a friend that he wanted to sell a house and communicated to him the terms on which he was willing to sell it. The latter arranged for the sale of the house and wrote to the former that plaintiff had agreed to purchase the house on the terms proposed and was sending a certain sum as earnest-money. Defendant received the sum, and promised to send a formal receipt by registered post. This he failed to do, and ultimately refused to sell the house on the ground that it belonged to his wife who was not willing to sell it. Plaintiff, thereupon, brought a suit for specific performance and in the alternative for damages:

Held, (1) that there was a completed contract for the sale of the house between the parties;

(2) that specific performance could not, under the circumstances, be decreed;

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for breach of the contract, the measure of damages being the difference between the market-value of the house and the contractual price. A PANNA LAL v. HUSAIN BEG, 21 A. L. J. 428 460

"I wrote you to get the account adjusted. I will send all the dues on hearing from you. What you write now is not acceptable to me. O, brother, no fall in the market is yet in sight within five or seven days. It is not proper to bring one under clutches in this way. I am ready to give you damages nor do I propose to cause loss to you. If I would have got the goods here, I would not have suffered loss. Considering this you will get the account adjusted."

At the time of this letter the market price of the goods in question at all events at P had fallen below the prices current at the date of purchase. About a fortnight after the receipt of the defendants' letter the plaintiffs without any intimation to the defendants sold the goods at P. and brought a suit to recover the difference between the sum realized and the purchase price :—

Held, (1) that if the plaintiffs were to be regarded as sellers they were governed by section 107 of the Contract Act and were not entitled to sell the goods without giving notice that unless the defendants took delivery they would sell the goods for what they would fetch ;

(2) that if the plaintiffs were to be regarded as the agents of the defendants their business was to hold the goods at the disposal of their principals and unless they had express authority to sell them, they were not entitled to sell them without either requesting payment or asking the defendants to take delivery and giving notice that in the event of their failure to do so they would sell the goods for their account ;

(3) that there was nothing in the letter of the defendants which could possibly be interpreted as an authority to the plaintiffs to sell. The letter really appealed to the generosity of the plaintiffs not to enforce their right of despatching the goods immediately, but to wait and possibly to wait a little longer for payment and the mere fact that the defendants said that they were willing to bear the loss or suffer any damage that may arise could not mean anything more than that the loss was theirs and did not really concern the plaintiffs ;

Subsequently, he obtained a money-decree against Harnam Singh and in execution of that decree brought to sale the sum left in deposit with the defendant for payment to himself. The deposit was purchased by plaintiff who now sued to recover the amount :

Held (1) that Harnam Singh having paid off Hira Singh could claim to step into his shoes ;

(2) but that Hira Singh not having been a party to the contract between G and the defendant could not enforce that contract and consequently there was no sum in the hands of the defendant attachable as belonging to Hira Singh or Harnam Singh, and the plaintiff's suit was, therefore, liable to be dismissed L CHET KAUR v. GURMUKH SINGH, (1922) A.
